

ELLIOTT REVEALS PLOT TO DYNAMITE WILLIAMSON'S HOME

Man Indicted With Ex-Sheriff Smith Says Scheme Was Abandoned Because of Danger to Others—Enemy to Be Shot From Ambush

Prineville, Or., May 8.—Confessing a plot to dynamite the home of ex-Congressman Williamson, which was prevented only by the fear of killing other members of his family, Larkin Elliott sprung a sensation today in the trial of ex-Sheriff C. Sam Smith, accused of arson. Elliott is jointly indicted with Smith.

Elliott gave a detailed account of his dealings with Smith and alleged that together they had committed numerous crimes. They were determined to drive Williamson out of the country and after burning his sheep-shearing plant, putting out poison for his sheep, plotting to burn his wool on its way to market and cutting his fences, they finally decided to resort to dynamite.

According to Elliott, Smith's plan was to put a partially burned fuse in a box of dynamite and place it on Williamson's porch. If this did not scare the ex-congressman out the ex-sheriff suggested that they blow up his enemy's house. Elliott objected to this on the ground that others besides Williamson might be killed and the scheme of shooting the ex-congressman from ambush was substituted.

Larkin Elliott, codefendant with former Sheriff Smith and star witness for the state in the trial against Smith for arson, made a full and complete confession of the crimes of which the defendant is charged giving a full and complete account of the preparing of the plot at various times. He explained the reason for the plot to dynamite Williamson's residence was that he and Smith were in the neighborhood of a courtroom crowded to the lozenges, many women and children being present to hear the witness speak calmly of setting fire to the buildings and destroying property.

In the statement of G. W. Barnes attorney for the defendant an outline of what the defense would show was laid before the jury. Barnes said that of the Williamson land fraud trial was repeated, mentioning the relations existing between the defendant and ex-Congressman Williamson.

Considerable stress was placed by Barnes upon the fact that the witness, Elliott was a juror in the trial of the United States grand jury at that time which was held by Barnes as being personal spite on the part of Elliott.

The first witness called in the case was ex-Congressman Williamson. A plot of the premises showing the location of respective residences of Smith and Elliott and the other buildings, especially the shearing plant and the sheep camp that were burned, was introduced in the evidence and identified by Williamson as having been made by him.

The greater part of Williamson's evidence was used to show the location of buildings and other points of interest in the case and was repeatedly objected to by the attorney for the defendant, the objection being overruled. The examination of Williamson took about two hours.

Elliott's Story.
The next witness was Larkin Elliott. The taking of his testimony occupied about three hours. After relating the exact circumstances of the day the burning was given me at the scene I describe the event from the time the two were starting from Smith's house until they returned there. This story follows:

"Smith had said that Williamson was crowding us too close and that we must put him out of business and the day the burning was done Smith and I started from his barn on horseback. Smith brought two lanterns and handed me one of them and put the other in his pocket. We mounted our horses and went out to Smith's pasture pasture in the Vanhook place on up Wickieup creek and Horse Heaven to the shearing plant. Smith got down from his horse and the Crooked river and went and set the house on fire. Then he said: 'Can you get down and fix the barn.'

"I got off my horse, handed him the reins and went into the barn and scattered the contents of the coal oil bottle over the woodwork and other points of interest in the case and was repeatedly objected to by the attorney for the defendant, the objection being overruled. The examination of Williamson took about two hours.

"I told Smith that they were accusing him of burning the plant and that track had been followed down to his place.

"He said that you knew yourself that is not us, not within a mile of the way we went. We did not come through the big pasture. I don't care what they say, though, just so they cannot prove it. I will go down to town and put different ideas into people's heads."

"The cross-examination of Elliott was heard today by J. K. Weatherford, assisted by his partner, Russ Wyatt, and occasionally by Barnes. In this examination the fact that some of these plots had been talked of as long as six months ago was brought out. After about two hours' reviewing of the story as told in direct examination it was left substantially untouched, with the one exception of the hour when the parties left Smith's house to cut the fence. Although the witness was questioned, questioning the witness was far from exhausted and left the stand without having become noticeably confused.

HUSBAND WAS LAZY, TESTIFIES HIS WIFE

Because her husband wanted her to work to help support him and his mother and brother kept nagging her, as she alleges, Mrs. Albie E. Stone has begun suit in the circuit court for divorce from Harry Stone. She says Harry threatened to desert her unless she went to work and that he would not speak to her until she did so. She said she did not admire work and thought she should provide for him. She says he gambled in the morning and called a doctor for her when it was necessary. On one occasion, she declares, when she asked him to call a physician he asked her whether it was a doctor or a dose of strychnine she needed. They were married in Portland December 14, 1904. Mrs. Stone asks permission to resume her maiden name of Albie E. Fowler.

JONES GETS BEST OF ANKENY IN FIGHT

(United Press Special Wire.)
Seattle, May 8.—The Republican convention of King county this morning resulted in such a warm time between different factions that an adjournment was summarily taken until late this afternoon.

The fight between the Jones and Ankeny forces has practically resulted in a victory for Jones with the assurance of an unopposed delegation to the state convention.

SARSAPILLA by Dr. Cassila Dew.

The people coming and going are keeping Portland society busied with informal entertaining, but there has been little doing in the way of large functions. So many have gone to California for a week or two, the few who remain have still more lessened the ranks of those who remain, and many of the most prominent matrons are wrapped up in the preparations for going abroad. A substantial hole will be left in society's ranks when all who will leave within the next few weeks for Europe have gone.

Major and Mrs. James Canby, who have taken apartments at the New Nor-tonia are delightful acquisitions to Portland society. Major Canby, and as the son of Major Canby, who was for a good many years stationed at Vancouver post, is well known here. Mrs. Canby was Miss Eugenia Cunningham who spent her girlhood here and was a student at St. Helen's school. The Cunninghams were a prominent family socially when Portland was their home.

Mrs. Frank A. Nitchey also was an entertainer last Friday afternoon. She gave a bridge luncheon for 12. Two weeks ago she gave another of 20 covers, and this was the second of the series.

Mrs. E. C. Shevlin is giving a luncheon of some size at the golf club today. Mrs. Shevlin, who is a recent acquisition and occupies Mrs. Helen Ladd Corbett's beautiful home on West Park, has become a decided favorite, and is much entertained.

Miss Flora Fleischer will entertain tomorrow with a luncheon of 12 covers. Her honor guests will be Miss Mildred Rhinastrom and Miss Cora Marx, two popular girls in that set whose engagements were announced a short time ago by The Journal. Miss Marx, who is enjoying her first season out, is immensely popular with her set. Her bright personality and her musical accomplishments, for she is one of the best of the younger singers, make her easily a favorite, and she is said to be a very clever comedienne for vaudeville entertainments.

Mrs. Steinhart is entertaining this afternoon at the fortnightly bridge club, composed of some 12 matrons.

Mrs. Jack Marshall Yates and Mrs. Fred W. Craven are to be at home from 2 to 5 next Tuesday afternoon at Elton court. They were hostesses together recently at a very pretty dinner at the Graves' beautiful riverside home at the golf links.

The symphony concert fulfilled all the expectations for an ultra-fashionable event Wednesday evening. The program was filled with handsomely gowned women and many matrons entertained parties at dinner prior to the concert. The popular girls were much frequented that evening. After the concert a good many went to the Nor-tonia, where they could hear again Henry Bettman, who won so much applause as soloist of the evening, and M. P. Pincus, whose own composition played that evening, contained a
