FULTON-TAFT VICTORY CONVENTION'S FEATURE

Senator Bourne's Name Is Hissed in the Republican State Convention—Baker City Editor Scored by Banks for Reprinting Collier's Fulton Article.

The state convention is ended and from first to last not a break nor even a scratch on the Fulton slate was made. Union's delegates were elected with Fulton to lead them. Bourne was turned down, repudiated, hissed and assigned to the political scrapbasket by the Fulton stalwarts who controlled everything, directed everything, mapped out everything beforehand and read the program from a letterhead bearing the heading of the Fulton-Taft headquarters.

Only once during the day did the name of Senator Bourne cause anything but grins and derisive laughter, and that was when a telegram from him was read donating $50 to the state election expenses at large and $100 each to the two congressional campaigns. When the donation drew forth some flattering applause, while at least one delegate gave proof of his commendation by the remark that "Bourne is a good sport, all right."

Contrary to this was the attitude of the convention when A. W. Orton read a telegram from Bourne withdrawing as a candidate for the national delegation and setting out as his reasons that he had been trying to work for the best interests of Oregon as he saw them. The telegram was met with laughter and hisses and was not incorporated in the records of the convention in toto, though reference to the withdrawal may have been.

Taft Pledge Adopted.
The whole program was rushed through once the state convention met in the afternoon. Upon motion of W. W. Banks of Multnomah the temporary officers, A. J. Johnson, chairman; Thad W. Vreeland, secretary; and W. G. Clarke, assistant secretary, were made the permanent officers. The same resolution endorsing Taft and pledging the delegation from Oregon to him which had been adopted by the first congressional convention was adopted. The amendment to substitute the name of Roosevelt for Taft being met with uproarious laughter and drowned under a hurricane of negation.

The convention went at once to the task of electing the four delegates-at-large as soon as the resolution had been disposed of. W. Kuykendal of Lane county was nominated by D. A. Falne of that county. W. A. Williams of Washington was nominated by Hughes of Washington; George H. Williams was nominated by D. A. Falne of Washington; C. N. McArthur of Multnomah, who held a Klamath county proxy; A. N. Gilbert was named by A. N. Smith of Marion, and C. G. Huntley of Clackamas was put before the convention by J. U. Campbell of Oregon City.

Judge Williams Speaks.
After various seconding speeches had been made it was determined by the convention to cast the unanimous vote of the gathering for George H. Williams and Senator Fulton. This was done and Judge Williams made an address of acceptance in which he spoke for the support of the ticket and branded as unfair the attitude in which H. M. Calk had been placed by his refusal to accept the nomination. He referred to Statement No. 1 candidates throughout the state. The judge took issue with Statement No. 1 and urged the convention to stand behind Orton because he was the choice of the Republican party. Following Judge Williams' speech the ballot was taken on the remaining candidates for delegates, resulting in the following vote: A. N. Gilbert 157, C. G. Huntley 123, W. Kuykendal 121, W. A. Williams 73. Gilbert and Huntley were declared to have been elected, whereupon Mr. Kuykendal moved that the vote be made unanimous, which was done. A. L. Tetu of Multnomah, as alternate for Huntley; F. A. Brown of Multnomah as proxy for George H. Williams; W. A. Williams for Fulton and H. D. Kinney for A. N. Gilbert, were elected by unanimous vote of the convention.

Presidential Electors.
The convention passed next to the election of presidential electors and J. D. Lee was put in nomination by F. E. Beach; R. R. Butler of Clatsop by W. R. Richards of Multnomah; J. W. Sherwood of Multnomah by E. B. Colwell; F. J. Miller of Linn by M. N. Norwood, and A. C. Marsters of Douglas by E. D. Briggs. The vote on these candidates resulted: A. C. Marsters, 223; R. R. Butler, 223; F. J. Miller, 177; J. D. Lee, 159, and J. W. Sherwood, 158. The first four were declared to be elected.

Following this action the state convention adjourned.

The second congressional convention was called to order by W. E. Williamson soon after the adjournment of the state convention. It proceeded at once to elect a permanent chairman, but before the name of Columbia county had called into question the legality of the organization of the congressional committee. This was a move to drive Williamson out of the chairmanship, he having been elected the night before when it was not known he was in the Bourne camp. Williamson put Flag on of commission by refusing to consider his protest and Mr. Manley was elected and took command.

Williams Tries Again.
W. A. Williams tried to insert the name of Roosevelt and was laughed down under an avalanche of Noes. The convention went at once to the election of the ticket and resulted in the selection of Henry Waldo Coe of Multnomah by 79 votes, Asa B. Thomson by 68, R. E. Sewell of Multnomah by 79 votes, and B. E. Kennedy of Baker 32.

This election stirred up the coals by reason of an attack made by W. W. Banks on Kennedy, who called the delegate to account for having printed an article published in Collier's, in the Baker City Herald the night Fulton visited the town. Banks scored Kennedy unmercifully, which brought Frank Davey to his feet in reply.

Davey Arouses Banks.
Davey began to hand a few verbal punches to Banks, and Chairman Manley tried to rule him out of order but found no opening, so had to allow him to proceed. Davey concluded by saying that Banks' committee had inserted charges against any man for political action. This made Banks mad and he replied in a heated speech. He poured oil on the waters by asking that the convention "get back to something pleasant."

As alternates, J. L. Gault was elected for Thomson and J. B. Kelly for Dr. Coe. The convention then adjourned, after which an attempt was made to unseat Williamson and elect a Fulton man as chairman of the second congressional committee, but Williamson rode over the opposition and refused to entertain their motions, thus holding his seat.

Charles Waters' House Burned.
Lebanon, Or., May 15.—The residence of Charles Waters was entirely destroyed by fire about midnight Wednesday night. Mr. Waters was in the house alone, asleep. He was awakened by the roof's falling in and barely got out. A portion of his household goods was saved. The fire is supposed to have originated at the kitchen stove. The loss is estimated at about $1,300. There is $100 insurance.
