WEATHER REPORT

The plateau disturbance has drifted eastward since yesterday morning and now overlies the eastern slope of the Rocky mountains. It is rapidly losing energy and has now almost disappeared. The high area over California is extending rapidly inland and clear skies prevail this morning over the entire southwest from the California coast eastward to the Rockies. The weather also cleared in eastern Oregon and southern Idaho during the night and heavy frosts occurred this morning at Baker City and Boise. A depression of moderate character overlies British Columbia and Alberta, and general rains have fallen during the night in Washington, Oregon, Idaho, western Montana and British Columbia. Cloudy weather with probably showers is expected over northwestern Oregon and western Washington tonight and Sunday, while fair weather with light frosts tonight is indicated over southwestern and eastern Oregon anad southern Idaho. In eastern Washington and northern Idaho cloudiness, with possibly showers, is expected tonight, with fair weather Sunday. It will be warmer Sunday.
