MOVING PICTURE TRICKS

How the Work of Mouths Passes on Screen in a Few Minutes.

Most remarkable tricks can be played by the camera, but for reproduction in the biograph these tricks are intensified a thousandfold.

For instance, says a writer in the Independent, the building of a skyscraper within a few minutes is a feat easily accomplished on the screen.

In order to do this a camera is placed in position when the foundations begin, and by means of slow time exposure extending over months an exact reproduction of the building can be projected on the screen, occupying less than 10 minutes.

When the old Star theatre in New York was demolished a number of years ago a camera took time exposure pictures of the operation, and when finished it was possible to throw on the screen a perfect reproduction of the work. The theatre could be demolished within five minutes, and by reversing the films rebuilt within the same period.

Even the growth of plants and flowers is observed. By time exposures extending over months it is possible to reproduce exactly within a few minutes the budding and flowering of plants. Oranges spring from the flower and turn into golden fruit while you wait, or apples come into existence like magic on the trees which a few moments before were bare and leafless.

The moving picture taker is everywhere. The story is told of an American who while watching some moving pictures in a hall in Paris saw a reproduction of a Broadway throng at the noon hour.

His interest in the old familiar scenes was intensified when he saw his own face and figure in the crowd. When he was close to the camera he was still more surprised to see a valuable watch charm which he had always worn attached to his fob drop and disappear from sight.

He had mourned the loss of this jewel for several months, but had no idea where it was lost. Then out of the moving throng appeared a young lady who suddenly stooped and picked up the charm from the pavement.

The man gasped and dropped back in his seat when he recognized the features of the woman as she approached closer to the camera. A few weeks later he recovered his watch charm after he had cabled to the woman to ascertain if there was any truth in the strange coincidence or whether it was all fiction.

The film companies are developing their own plays, paying experts in pantomime to invent plots and scenes which will show up well in moving pictures. In Paris this work has reached a higher development than in this country.

A considerable class of expert pantomime actors depend entirely upon the film companies for their living. They receive all the way from $15 to $40 a week for their services.

Then too the story writer comes in for a share of the profits of the new profession. A good story suitable for moving picture reproduction may sell from $5 to $30, or even more.

The story is not written out in magazine form, but is a brief description of scenes and acts which have a well defined plot. Some of the companies are experimenting with the phonograph in connection with the moving pictures, by means of which the actors in the scenes will actually speak and declaim as the various pantomime scenes are thrown on the screen.
