

CITY OF ROSES HOLDS OUT ARMS TO WORLD

Every Indication That Rose Festival Will Far Surpass Anything of Its Kind Attempted on Coast—Work on Reviewing Stand Will Begin Soon.

Portland will throw her gates wide open to the world and bid everybody enter and join in the celebration of her second annual Rose Festival Monday morning, June 1.

With only eight days remaining until the opening event on the program is to take place, the group of men who are arranging for the grand civic jubilee and who have been working to the best of their energy for the year past, declare that the festival will surpass all celebrations, entertainments and demonstrations yet attempted in these parts. There are more than a score of active, bustling committees at work picking up details of the preliminary plans, they are arranging for everything that will pertain to the success of the festival, and they are doing everything that will go to help entertain the throngs of visitors who will be here at that time.

Great Auto Parade.

The various parade committees are holding a busy session. The automobile parade will be the longest and probably the most spectacular parade ever held in the west, for the reason that no other class of vehicles will be allowed in it and the line of cars will stretch over the line of march at the rate of 10 miles an hour and every one of the 500 or more which are expected to be in line will be gorgeously decorated in fine floral effects.

The water carnival will be something entirely new to this part of the country, for so opportunity heretofore has been presented for bringing together the commercial and pleasure craft of every size and description on so big a scale. Besides, there will be an endless number of valuable prizes offered for the finest decorated craft, two trophies to be awarded in each class, and this has already invited the keenest sort of rivalry among boat owners, not only of Portland, but up and down the Willamette, and up and down the Columbia, and Chairman McAllister is confident that he can secure a number of entries of fine pleasure craft from the Puget sound country.

Programs in Demand.

So many have been the requests for programs of the events of the week that the supply of leaflets and postcards has been exhausted, and for that reason the festival requests that the main events be described in the Sunday Journal. Letters come in every mail and several telephone calls have been received from other towns and cities, and the inquiries are so numerous that the festival committee would like to be able to make such arrangements and therefore asks that the festival publish a list of the most important events so that they may select the most convenient days for their trip to Portland.

The following brief program of attractions is therefore appended:

BUILDING MORE THAN PAYS NOW

Commercial Club Structure Proves Profitable Investment for Organization.

A large room forming the ground-floor corner of the new Portland Commercial club building at Fifth and Oak streets has been leased to the Banfield-Vevey company for a term of five years for $21,000. This brings the Commercial club building income for the portion now rented up to $18,500 a year over and above all fixed charges of taxes and interest on investment, and still there is some space to let.

There are now on file more than 60 applications for membership in the club. The board of governors is ambitious to have the membership exceed 1,500 on June 1, making the club easily one of the greatest organized bodies in the world. When it is considered that there has not been any solicitation for new members except in the ordinary way of one friend speaking to another, the growth of the club speaks most eloquently of the magnificent prosperity of this city and section.

Manager Gordon, discussing the growth of the club, said: "No other city on the Pacific coast or throughout the West has made any progress that Portland has achieved in having a daily meeting of her representative business men. Minneapolis has a club similar to the Commercial club, and the two rank as first among such bodies in the United States. Salt Lake City has made considerable progress, and Tacoma has determined to have an organization similar to the Portland Commercial club. Seattle has a growing organization, and there is a disposition at Spokane to move along the same lines.

The coming together of Portland's business men in her modern, up-to-the-minute clubrooms is usually considered by travelers as the most interesting feature incident developed by a trip throughout the Pacific coast.

When it is considered that Chicago is only able to get together a business men's lunch once a week, after months of effort; when St. Louis has made a failure along the same lines; when the Kansas City Commercial club is little more than a large parlor, with probably but one fiftieth of the membership of the Portland Commercial club; when Philadelphia's great Trades league and the Los Angeles chamber of commerce consider remarkable the meeting together that occurs in Portland every day, it is little wonder that this city has grown with such remarkable rapidity, and is today keeping up an average beyond that of any other one city upon the continent.

LATCHSTRING OUTSIDE AT TEMPLE OF ELKS

Visitors Will Be Warmly Received by Antlered Ones of Portland.

Special attention will be taken to make the visiting brothers feel at home, at the closing social session of the Portland lodge of Elks, which will be held at the lodge clubrooms, Seventh and Stark, next Thursday night. There will be a fine line of extra "links" for the wanderers from the home land, and the committee on arrangements will endeavor to corral about 1,000 of the boys from other lodges—more or less. The 1,500 or more members of No. 142 will be rounded up by deputy sheriffs and strategic means if they attempt to stay away.

This has been the most successful season in the history of the local lodge in the way of fine programs for the "stag" and in the matter of attendance. These monthly functions have had an average attendance of more than 800 and some of them have run into the four figure column.

The forthcoming "stag" will put all former ones in the shade, according to the committee, but the information as to what it has in store for the boys will be given out.

"We have a lot of entirely new features up our sleeve," said Chairman McAllister last night, "and we want to spring them as a surprise, and I can honestly say that we have a list of attractions that is far ahead of anything yet done. The best talent we could lay hands on has been secured, and we will keep things a-moving from the tap of the gong. No long waits, no tedious numbers, no 'No. 1' and 'No. 2' from start to finish. There will be things to eat and the thirsty will be provided with pigeon milk and merry widow cocktails.

The "stag" will be open to all members of the order whether local or visiting.

HENRY SKOW GETS FIRST PRIZE

Boys Rewarded for Manual Training Work by Honeyman Company.

If any skeptic doubts the wisdom of maintaining manual training departments in the public schools all he needs to do is to take a walk down Alder street and look into the display windows of the Honeyman Hardware company's store, where the prize-winning articles in the recent contest held by the company are on exhibition.

All day crowds of admiring spectators have passed in front of the display windows to view the admirable collection of hand-made furniture and bric-a-brac and doubt is expressed by many that some of the pieces could have been made by children so young.

The teachers of the manual training schools, however, vouch for each piece of work and there is absolutely no prize winning piece which was not solely the work of the pupil to whom it is credited.

Following is a list of the prize winners:
