

Mounted Police on the Way to Inspection

DEAD GIVEN HONOR

The veterans were not neglected, and at several formal exercises were held. The light rain recorded by the weather men did not begin to fall until after the last salute had been given and the crowds were dispersing.

At Long Pt. cemetery the address of the day was delivered by M. L. Pratt, who spoke from a platform near the soldiers' monument. He touched on the familiar history of the inspection of the G. A. R. and of Memorial day, drawing the lesson of patriotism from the observance of a day devoted to the memory of those who kept intact the stars in the field of blue. He paid a tribute to the spirit of the boys of '61, and declared that the nation has no need to fear for its perpetuity while this spirit lives in the younger generation.

Veterans' Septette Sings.
One of the pleasing features of the service was the singing of a septette of veterans, all but one of whom wore long beards of gray. Their voices blended to good effect and sounded clear and strong far beyond the human circle that surrounded the stand. Tomlinson's band furnished the instrumental music, including "The Holy City" and "Noiser, My God, to These" among its selections. Lincoln's Gettysburg address was read by L. A. McGowan, and D. J. Haynes, the adjutant of the day, read the official orders of the department commander, which included the reading of the original proclamation of Memorial day in 1868 by the then commander-in-chief, General John A. Logan.

Rev. H. A. Barden, the department chaplain, delivered the invocation at the opening of the exercises and the commander carried out the ritual of the order. Mrs. Jennie Pritchard of the Women's Relief corps made a short address, reminding the veterans that it was a woman who made the first American flag and that the women, too, had trials and suffering through the years that their loved ones were away fighting the nation's battles.

The threatening weather and the increasing burdens of age thinned the ranks of those who came out for the parade this afternoon.

INSANE MAN BITES HOTEL GUEST'S FINGER

San Francisco, May 30.—The police are searching for an insane Italian, who caused a tremendous disturbance in the lobby of the Central hotel, early today, and bit a finger nearly off the right hand of J. J. Slavin, a guest. The Italian entered the place and abused every one present. He snatched a paper from the hand of Slavin and then closed in on him, biting like an angry wild animal. When Slavin screamed with pain, the Italian turned and ran out the door, making his escape. Those who saw him say he undoubtedly is a maniac.

In the event of Calkins' election, Bourne would count upon dominating the new senate. Calkins' vacillating position on Statement No. 1, the most vital issue of the present campaign, together with Bourne's friendly office in his behalf, indicate the ease with which Bourne would swing his colleague.
