MANNING'S NAME NOT ON ITS TICKET

Municipal Association Gives Only Faint Praise to District Attorney.

John Manning has not received the indorsement of the Portland Municipal association and his name is not to be found on the official ticket of the association as given out for publication.

The association gave Manning a partial indorsement at a recent meeting but this action came through a special committee appointed by the executive board to consider Mr. Manning's case and take such action upon it as was deemed to be proper. The committee was composed of Samuel Connell, O. P. N. Jamieson and H. W. Stone. It was instructed to arrange a letter which would not be an official indorsement but which would convey the idea that in the estimation of the association Manning might be a better man than his opponent, George J. Cameron.

The letter praised the promises for the future that had been made by Mr. Manning and said that his platform looked good. It did not praise the long lapse of time, however, during which Mr. Manning allowed the early part of his administration to go on without doing anything much toward law enforcement.

John Bain secretary of the association explains that the association has never given Mr. Manning an unqualified indorsement. He says the executive board appointed the special committee to draft the letter with the distinct understanding that it was not to be an unqualified indorsement for the board would never have given that. Manning's name was left off the official ticket for the reason that he was not indorsed fully by the organization.

Yes, Many Die Off the Battle Field

These are not all!
Here by the wall
Is the grave of one who died in the war,
Though her body hadn't a wound nor scar.
Her hope and heart were broken, when
In a mass of men
Her lover fell in a pool of gore
With the flag he bore.
Her life and love together fled
When he was dead;
Any violets left, girls? Let them fall
Here by the wall!

These are not all!
Go back, and call
The boys that carry the evergreen—
Here is a grave you men hain't seen.
It's old man Brown's. His heart clean broke,
'Most as if he was women-folk.
He had five sons—his wife was dead—
Nothin' could keep 'em to home, he said,
An' every last one o' that whole lot
Had to get shot!
Th' old man hadn't no grit, no pride—
Just up an' died!
Lay the evergreen softly down
Over the grave of old man Brown!

These are not all!
Let the lilies fall
Here on this wee, small grave in the shade.
I can remember the day we laid
The captain's baby in this green spot.
Cap, he was shot.
An' some fool neighbor made haste to tell
The captain's widder the news, and—well,
Down she went in a faint—just fell!
An' it killed the baby. She lived on,
Health and reason forever gone.
Lay lilies here.
Was that a tear?
I went to the war myself that year!

Put roses here.
This grave is dear—
She was my sister. The truest heart—
Always ready to do her part.
Gave up her son
When the first gun
Thundered at Sumter! She had but one,
An' she died when
(With stronger men)
He starved to death in a prison pen!
(The boy she had fed and clothed and kissed,
An' done for, so that he hardly missed
His father—dead when he was a child).
She never smiled;
She loved red roses when he was small;
Here let them fall.
We honor the soldiers; but they ain't all!

—Mrs. McVean Adams, in the Travelers' Record.

SEALS TAKE GAME FROM PORTLAND

Smash Ball All Over Lot and Run Around Bases Till They Are Tired.

It took San Francisco's warriors just 100 minutes to make 15 runs and 17 hits this morning while Portland was making three runs and five hits.

That is the story briefly but it does not tell how San Francisco battered the ball all over the lot, changed the line of battle until the spectators did not know whether to expect Cal Ewing to enter the game, and it did not tell how Casey's stalwarts played desperately to win when there was no possible chance to win. Portland had an off day and it was way off.

To cap it all, Mohler protested the game when Pernoll took Bloomfield's place in the first because he did not wear regulation stockings. That was before San Francisco had 15 runs.

To start with, Bloomfield walked the first two men and before the inning was over Frisco had four runs and two hits. Pernoll went in and did good work for awhile, but was later relieved by Johnson, who came in from third, where he was replaced by Ryan, Pernoll taking Ryan's place in right field. These were the changes on the Portland lineup, but the Seals went them one better. In the fourth, with 10 runs stowed away to none for the Beavers, Henley was transferred to first, Williams went out, Zelder went in to pitch and Curtis went to third.

With the battle lines once more arranged to the satisfaction of the managers the war was renewed with the same disastrous results. Portland couldn't play ball this morning and that was all there was to it. Casey made a beautiful catch of Melchoir's swift line drive in the fourth and Bassey did likewise with a hot one from McArdle in the seventh.

With the exception of these plays the game was practically featureless, save for the smashing hits of the Seals. They simply saw the ball coming all the time and wanted to knock it as far as they could. They did.

As far as the fans were concerned there were a goodly number present and they enjoyed the battle. They smiled, laughed, cheered and yelled. It was no game to criticise and the rooters soon sized up the situation and took matters philosophically. There seemed to be a deep-rooted sentiment prevalent, however, that San Francisco would have a different time of it this afternoon. One fan was heard to say as he went out ruminating on the score: "Well, I am glad we got that out of our system." That was the way they all felt. The score:

LA FOLLETTE CHEERFUL

standing on his feet so long. His back ached and his knees were sore, he said. He spent some of the time in a chair, having explained his physical condition at the beginning of his speech, but as he talked he became interested and, though he leaned on the back of the chair most of the time, he was standing. His feet were badly swollen, he said, but all of his troubles were physical.

He went directly to the senate barber shop, where he joked and talked as he was shaved. He spurned a carriage which was offered to take him home and walked.

Will Resume Speech.

After sleeping a few hours it was his intention to return and resume the speech. The program for today is that Senator Gore of Oklahoma will follow Stone and then La Follette will begin again. Stone is expected to speak several hours himself.

The longest previous filibuster was conducted by Senator Allen of Nebraska in 1890, when he defeated the silver purchase law.

The surprising feature of the La Follette filibuster was the support he received, when as the only Republican opposing the measure he had appealed to the Democrats for aid. In questions of rules many of the Republicans voted with him.

Senator Aldrich tried to get a vote on the adoption of the conference report, but Senator Stone was on his feet ready to talk and the motion was not put, the Missouri senator being recognized by the chair.

Frequent Interruptions.

A number of members, who had been absent during the night, refreshed by sleep arrived just as Stone was getting under way.

"I am going to follow the lead of the senator from Wisconsin," said Stone. "I am more than with him in this fight."

Members frequently interrupted Stone, saying they could not hear, but he would not strain his voice. He proceeded to read lengthy editorials and pamphlets relative to the currency question. Aldrich often interrupted him with questions.

Senator Gore to Rescue.

Senator Gore stopped Stone long enough to ask if a quorum was present. He was ruled out of order and when he tried to appeal from the decision of the chair he was denied his request.

At 12:30 o'clock this afternoon Senator Stone was still speaking. The leaders are now formulating a plan to prevent La Follette from speaking again by enforcing a rule that no senator shall speak more than twice on the same subject on the same legislative day. It is claimed that La Follette made a short speech yesterday before he began his record-breaking oratorical performance. The point will be made on the ground that La Follette yesterday yielded the floor for the introduction of bills from the house and it is argued that this interruption made him speak twice.

Asks Pertinent Question.

Aldrich interrupted Stone this afternoon and asked:

"Is it true that you returned to Washington in the interest of a certain presidential candidate?"

He referred to William J. Bryan, and called attention to newspaper reports that Bryan had asked Stone to assist La Follette in fighting the currency bill.

Stone replied that he had received no such request from Bryan.

PREVIOUS FILIBUSTER RECORDS SMASHED BY LA FOLLETTE

By John E. Lathrop.

(Special Dispatch to The Journal.)

Washington, D. C., May 30.—All previous records have been broken by Senator La Follette, who lately got up from a sick bed. Previous record in the senate was held by Allen of Nebraska, who in 1893, spoke 14 hours and 10 minutes against the bill to repeal the Sherman silver purchasing act. Allen, however, had assistance, being permitted by unanimous consent to have the clerk read, so several hours were consumed by the clerks reading matter Allen sent to the desk. La Follette was denied consent that clerk read, so he had to actually fill in time on his feet, excluding time consumed by roll calls.

Tensest Interest.

Interest in the present filibuster is tensest in years, touching any parliamentary situation which has arisen. Interested onlookers without exception witnessed the battle against the majority forces, led by Aldrich, and La Follette, who determinedly fought against what he declared is a bill "to fasten even more securely the grip of a few banks on the people's circulation medium."

La Follette's position is that Wall street banks controlled by the Standard Oil and Morgan coterie will be able to regulate the volume of currency under the provisions of the Aldrich-Vreeland bill. A further contention is that the railroad bond feature in the original Aldrich bill in the senate was eliminated the day he began his speech against it, but that the conference committee of both houses surreptitiously reinserted it by providing that emergency currency be issued based on certain designated classes of bonds, "and other securities"; that the last named clause authorized not only railroad bonds, but also any securities which might be accepted by the government.

La Follette alleges a well defined demand for a real reform currency system has been used by politicians of "the interests" as a cloak under which to foist on the nation a spurious bill which would render business men and banks in all but central reserve cities subject to financial domination of a few men who now control railways and finance from New York.

La Follette alleges senators not free from this domination are submitting to dictation from Aldrich.

The fact is well known that many Republican senators chafe under the situation developed by La Follette, because he, a Republican, forced the issue, put them on record against the Wisconsin man and as supporting Aldrich, who ruthlessly compelled them to obey his orders.

Guess Proves Good.

La Follette's theory that if he kept up the fight long enough, people of the country would learn the situation and send in telegrams urging senators to stand by him, has been proven good, as results already seen attained along that line. The consequence is serious embarrassment felt by many.

Aldrich maintains leadership as though every political life depended on victory. La Follette is equally determined to dispute the dominance of the Rhode Island senator in the party to which both belong.

When La Follette offered to desist if the bill was recommitted so as to eliminate the railroad bond feature, unless his bill for valuation of rail properties, was agreed on, Aldrich said:

"I will remain here until March 4, 1909, if necessary."

Struggle On to Finish.

"Then I will fight this bill so long as God gives me breath for my body," replied La Follette.

And the struggle was on to a finish between both senators.

The entire transformation of the national political situation is said to hang on the issue between them. If La Follette wins, the triumph will be the crowning glory of his career; if he loses, he loses nothing but wins much, is the comment around the capitol.

JOURNAL "TALKS" DIRECT WITH THE SENATE CHAMBER

During the transmission of the La Follette specials to The Journal early this morning the Postal Telegraph had the senate chamber at the capitol at Washington, District of Columbia, in direct communication. The special by Mr. Lathrop, correspondent of The Journal at Washington, was filed at the senate chamber telegraph office and came direct to the office of the Postal Telegraph, 126 Third street.

CHAMBERLAIN LEADS

350, Clatsop 250, Crook 250, Curry 50, Douglas 250, Gilliam 100, Grant 250, Harney 50, Jackson 200, Lake 50, Lincoln 100, Linn 600, Malheur 50, Marion 500, Multnomah 1,500, Polk 200, Sherman 50, Union 250, Wallowa 100, Yamhill 250. These figures make a total of 6,200.

By the same estimate it is conceeded that Cake will get 250 majority in Columbia county, 250 in Lane, 150 in Tillamook, 200 in Umatilla, making a total of 850 votes. This will leave Chamberlain's majority at 5,350.

No Estimates for Cake.

Over at the Republican headquarters no official estimate has been made. Chairman Kennedy of the county central committee stated this morning that he had been too busy to make any such compilation, and that he did not have sufficient data at hand from which to compile such a statement.

Major Kennedy contends in a general way, however, that Multnomah county will give Cake a majority of from 3,000 to 5,000. In the state at large he contends that Cake's majority will not be less than 5,000 and may be 15,000. At the Republican headquarters it is conceded that Coos, Josephine, Klamath and Wasco counties are doubtful, while they claim Clatsop and predict that Marion will give their candidate 400 majority.
