WEATHER REPORT

Two well marked depressions overlie the western half of the country this morning, the one central over western Montana, and the other overlying New Mexico. The former is of pronounced character, causing general rains over eastern Washington, southern Idaho and Montana during the last 12 hours. Moderate rains have also fallen over Kansas, Oklahoma and Missouri due to the last named disturbance. Cloudy weather prevails this morning over western Oregon and western Washington, but the rainfall during the night was light and scattering. An extensive high area overlies the great lakes and clear skies are reported this morning from the upper Mississippi valley and the upper lake region. General rains occurred over the northeastern states due to the depression now passing off the New England coast. The indications point to showers over this entire forecast district tonight and Tuesday.
