

MURDER WAS IN STANTON'S HEART

Love-Crazed Shooter of Councilman Threatened to Assassinate Others.

(Salem Bureau of The Journal.)
Salem, Or., June 4.—Ben Stanton, the love-crazed youth who shot Councilman J. F. Goode Tuesday evening as the latter was telephoning to the police for help, was out on a murderous spree that evening, for he threatened not only to shoot a friend, Roy Williams, but did shoot and came perilously near wounding a boy named McDowell because the latter would not run at Stanton's command.

Stanton had been released by his employer, E. C. Cross, a butcher, Tuesday afternoon. In order to collect his wages Stanton started out to see Manager Hunter of the Cross market, who lives in Yew Park. He compelled Roy Williams, a friend, to go with him at the point of the gun, and said if he started to run he would put a bullet through him. When they arrived near Hunter's home they met young McDowell, who had been playing baseball, and Stanton commanded him to run, which he did only after Stanton had fired a shot at him.

Thinks Stanton Crazy.
Williams says that Stanton was undoubtedly crazy, for he said repeatedly that none of his relatives had better interfere with him that evening or he would shoot them. Williams was so badly scared during the shooting that he fled to the street, and Stanton shot immediately upon opening the door and without giving any warning. This story is borne out by the fact that all three shots were fired from the side, one entering the shoulder and the other two grazing the shoulder and abdomen, and were inflicted just as they would have been if Goode were standing by the telephone and Stanton were shooting from the door.

Assaults on the Street.
Stanton also had said that Mrs. Reese, Goode's granddaughter, whom he wished to see at the Goode home, had promised to see him and says that he was enraged because the Goode would not let him see her. The Goode says that Stanton forced his attentions on Mrs. Reese on the street, and later followed her to the home of the elder Goode, where he demanded to see her. He threatened to shoot everybody in the house and would not allow anybody to step outside of the room. The Goode girls also say that Stanton did not appear to be very drunk when he was at the house.

It was when J. F. Goode had stepped into the vestibule of the G. A. R. hall to call for the police that Stanton opened the door on him and fired the shots that wounded him.

Instigated with Woman.
Stanton became infatuated with Mrs. Reese when they were school children together in Salem, and when her name was Miss Schanz. He had sworn that she should never be the wife of another. Mrs. Reese was married a short time ago and had gone to Heppner to live. She came to Salem to visit with her relatives last Saturday.

Stanton was taken into custody by two deputies yesterday morning, as he lay asleep on a couch in his brother's house. His revolver was released and he was prepared to resist arrest.

'VARSITY BILL CARRIES STATE

Big Majority in Multnomah Counteracts Negative Votes Elsewhere.

Complete returns from 195 precincts in Multnomah county give the University of Oregon appropriation bill a lead of 3,170 votes. It is estimated that the returns from the nine remaining precincts will increase the majority to 3,500.

The university has carried Lane county by 1,500, Wasco by 456, Clatsop by 290, Umatilla by 300, Jackson by 250, and has also carried Baker, Malheur, Union, Sherman, Wheeler, Josephine, Columbia, Klamath and Lake. Linn county has rolled up a majority of nearly 2,400 against the bill, and Marion county has given a majority of 1,500 against it. Other counties that have voted down the appropriation are Benton, Polk, Yamhill, Washington, Clackamas, Tillamook, Morrow and Willowa. No definite reports have been received from Gilliam, Grant, Crook, Harney, Douglas, Lincoln, Coos or Curry counties, but friends of the university say that the vote will be favorable in most of the counties.

RISKS CAPTURE TO VISIT HIS FAMILY

A. L. White Picked Up on an Old Charge of Bogus Checks.

Suspected of having passed worthless checks to the value of several hundred dollars, A. L. White, who decamped from Portland a year ago after obtaining various sums of money, was arrested on description by Detectives Jones and Tichenor yesterday afternoon. White was braving the risk of capture for the purpose of visiting his wife and children, who are said to reside in Portland.

Last March, a year ago, White passed checks on Gardner Brothers, the American restaurant and Pat Douglas, a saloonkeeper, securing $35 in all.

The detectives also have evidence which they believe will incriminate White with the passing of nine other checks in Portland, totaling in all over $100.

His career since leaving here last March will be investigated.

At the time of the shooting the hall was filled with members of the G. A. R. and Women's Relief Corps, who were startled by the shots. They rushed out to see Councilman Goode lying in a pool of blood. Mr. Goode's wounds were not serious, however, and he will recover.

DIVA LEFT HAYSTACK ON IDAHO RANCH TO SING IN PORTLAND

By G. L. W.

Madame Nordica has always been a figure of central interest to Americans. She is their own prima donna, born in Maine of American parentage and she has reached the top heights of fame. So why should they not have a personal feeling of pride in her?

But if they could once talk to her, once be entertained by her and allowed to feel her hospitality, her splendid womanhood, her sane view of life, her lack of fads, her healthy mindedness, what novelists would call her glowing womanhood, they would pronounce her more than ever their own. For Madame Nordica is an American not only in birth but in self. She pulsates with interest in the things that are interesting to the American public generally. She is interested in country life; she is interested in questions of labor and capital; in the solution of socialistic problems and in woman's suffrage. Of the latter she is a staunch champion, and in her generous manner she says, "Women like us who have to earn their livings must see that this is justice."

And in the great wealth and resources of the western country she is intensely interested.

"I always come through here on my private car, and I see nothing of the 'country,' she said. "But now I have been in the midst of its life and have a stupor of nature at close range. When my friend told me a short time ago that he was leaving New York to go to a ranch in Idaho I asked to go along. And he said yes, not thinking I meant it, and then he had to take me because I insisted. And it is so interesting to go through the wheat fields and to find nests in the haystacks and to live in a room with a chicken incubator with little chicks hatching out to the phonographic strains of 'Lead, Kindly Light.' Very appropriate that seemed to me to see light first to that tune. I have heard of many things done to the accompaniment of music, but never that before."

Madame Nordica, by the way, is the last of the great singers to come to visiting records made of the voice. She has submitted and they are now being made.

With an injured expression she goes on to tell how the messenger from Misses Steers and Coman found her on a haystack; how he loomed up in the horizon waving something wildly about his head, and how she looked for a horse pistol when she saw his chaps; but it was only a telegram. And then, and only then, were her neighbors persuaded that she was the real Nordica, as he "literally dragged me down from the haystack with orders to bring me dead or alive." And when you ask her where she was she says neither she nor any one else knows, but she was hovering about the borderland between Idaho and Oregon.

And she has many anecdotes to tell of the cats that scared her at night; of the pups that chewed her and for which she put cake on her window ledge, and she proudly shows three targets which she hit so close to the bullseyes that she expects to keep them forever as a testimonial of her first shooting. Yes, Madame surely enjoyed her country life.
