

THE JOURNAL

AN INDEPENDENT NEWSPAPER. PUBLISHED EVERY EVENING (EXCEPT SUNDAY) AND EVERY SUNDAY MORNING...

Unheard because our ears are dull, Unseen because our eyes are dim, He walks our earth, the wonderful, And all good deeds are done to him.

FULTON AND THE SENATORSHIP

SENATOR FULTON tells The Journal's Washington correspondent that he is still of the opinion that members of the legislature should regard their oath to the constitution of the United States as of the first importance... of the result. The Journal takes it for granted that all these men will keep their pledge. It has no right nor reason to assume that any of them will break it.

A CITY MAN TURNS FARMER.

"PAST MIDDLE AGE," writes George A. Cosgrove in Suburban Life, "broken in health, and without any knowledge of country life, I left the city 14 years ago and bought a run-down farm in one of the Connecticut hill towns...

Senator Fulton seems to intimate in his interview that Republican members of the legislature may disregard their pledge to the people and elect a Republican, but we hope the senator does not mean to be so understood, and we do not believe that any Statement No. 1 member will take that view of the case.

"It may be thought by some that my position on this subject in the result of a desire on my part to pave the way to an appeal to the legislature for reelection should I fail to secure approval of my candidacy by the voters, I assure you that I have no such thought or purpose.

A FATAL CONVENTION.

EDITOR HOPER of the Salem Journal, who did what he could under adverse circumstances for Mr. Cake, probably expressed the fact when he said that the action of the Republican state convention "in putting only its self-worship materials in its show window was enough to defeat Cake."

By Senator Fulton's own showing or statement, neither he nor Mr. Cake can be a candidate, and the people have not even considered any other Republican. The Republicans of the state decided on Cake as against Fulton; the people of the state have decided for Chamberlain as against Cake; and that should, as a matter of real Democracy or true Republicanism, settle the question even if there were no members pledged by Statement No. 1.

EDITORIAL: LESSON OF THE ELECTION

THE LESSON OF THE ELECTION

THE EXPERIENCE of Mr. Fulton, duplicated by Mr. Cake, has its full significance. A mind open to conviction cannot fail to understand its meaning.

Mr. Fulton refused to support Statement No. 1, and was defeated. Mr. Cake refused, after the primaries, to support Statement No. 1, and was defeated. Their attitude was identical; the fate that came to them the same.

Mr. Cake was warned in time to have saved himself from overthrow. The Journal warned him. His Statement No. 1 friends must have warned him. He made the fatal blunder of failing to understand the temper of the plain people with reference to Statement No. 1.

people by rejecting Statement No. 1, the primary law, and the initiative and referendum, and at the same time supporting the candidacy of a man for senator who professed to be in favor of these things.

Conditions Will Change.

That conditions of life will change to meet the necessities of the present growth of the country is inevitable. From movements now under way it is possible to see the outlines of these changes.

John Hays Hammond, to whom the Guggenheims pay a salary as a mining expert of $500,000 a year, wishes to be nominated for vice president on the Republican ticket.

At Salem an elderly citizen who was guiltless of any offense and had given his assailant no provocation, was shot, perhaps fatally, by an idling, vicious young man loaded with whiskey and armed with a revolver.

San Francisco recently voted $18,000,000 for civic improvements, another proof of that city's faith and enterprise. Besides, though Ruff is not convicted yet, he is not boss of the city.

President Roosevelt had a fall from a horse Tuesday, narrowly escaping injury. It is supposed that he received a wireless message while riding that Chamberlain had carried Oregon.

EDITORIAL: WHEN AMERICA IS GROWN

WHEN AMERICA IS GROWN

BY FREDERIC J. HASKIN. (Copyright, 1908, by Frederic J. Haskin.) The American nation is yet in its youth. The periods of depression which it sometimes suffers are but the growing pains of the boy in knickerbockers.

The present territory of the country will be amply able to take care of that immense number of people. No one needs to be crowded out of the state, but if the density of its population were extended all over the country...

San Francisco at the Golden Gate will be the center of a city of many millions, but the island itself probably will hold no more than 200,000 people.

Washington, subtitled Washington, will be the greatest social capital and the most beautiful city of the world.

As Things Are.

It was evening in the great west. The golden sun had gone down over the corn fields, and the wheat was dark.

Charles Conrad Abbott's Birthday. Charles Conrad Abbott, noted as a naturalist and archaeologist, was born June 4, 1842, at Trenton, New Jersey.

Mosquitoes and History. We learn from excellent authority that the ancient Egyptians were the first to end through misplaced confidence in wooden horses; we are fairly well agreed about the causes of the fall of Nineveh.

The Fishing Trip. "So you take a day off and you go to a hook where the flies are flying." "Yes, sir, and you simmer and cook."

Grouchy. From the Cleveland Leader. "Would you like me to trim a little off the ends of that hair, sir?" asked the barber.

Small Change

Small Change

At least Oregon hasn't any Boss Herd. As usual, a lot of Democratic sheriffs were elected.

The people are greater than a legislature. Independence in voting is on the increase.

Iowa also shows sign of wanting a new sort of senator. The salmon seem to have many friends among the voters.

Back east they are complaining about dog days already. Kicking worse than we ought to.

Oregon Sidelights

A man died in Gardiner recently who had lived there over 80 years and was supposed to be 105 years old when he died.

The party of men from Iowa who came in to look at ditch land along the Deschutes were very well pleased with what they saw.

The Astoria, Seaside & Tillamook Railroad company that was recently organized for the purpose of constructing an electric line from Astoria to points along the Oregon coast, is working on a bond issue.

Based on Jackson county's increased registration, the Medford Mail says: In the past two years Jackson county has forged ahead of Douglas, of Umatilla, and Washington and Wagon and is virtually tied with Linn.

The citizens of the Stuslaw valley are tired of waiting for the government to improve the bar at the mouth of the river. They are tired of waiting for the government to improve the bar at the mouth of the river.

The REALM of FEMINE

The REALM of FEMINE

How hard den the old puritanical notion that all pleasure is sinful is illustrated every now and then by some curious outbreak.

This time it was a member of the navy, a young man in Indianapolis, who introduced a resolution that dancing is immoral and productive of all manner of evil things.

Then new education takes the child as its pattern, and endeavors not to force his activities into unnatural channels.

People talk of Maud Allen's dancing as though it were some marvelous thing which she has originated.

From the ethical side, dancing is valuable because it satisfies in a wholesome way an inborn instinct.

YEINGIN must not be left out of remodeling calculations, for it is a most important factor, says The Ladies' World.
