Mr. and Mrs. Albert Madison Mayfield entertained a number of their married friends Friday evening with a unique affair called a "husband show." The walls of "Paradise Flat" were covered with mottoes painted with blueing on manila paper, such as "Presents make the heart grow fonder," "A husband at home is worth two at the club" and "Family jars contain no jam." The bench rules also were posted on the wall just as at a bonafide bench show, with specifications as to entries and the care and responsibility to be taken by the management and by the exhibitors. The entry blanks asked personal questions concerning the exhibitor and the exhibited and were marked "confidential."

Miss Frances Colt of New York, a bride-elect, and John Herron were the judges. A small silver mirror was presented to the handsomest husband, C. C. Colt. To F. J. Kupper fell the prize, a white silk tie, for guessing correctly the names of the most samples of material. The award for the sweetest disposition, a box of candy, went to Frank T. Chapman. The consolation, a book, "How to Be Happy Though Married," went to Fred Muller. W. B. Mann received the prize for punctuality, a small clock. Twenty three new pennies was the prize awarded the poorest all-round exhibit, but his name was kept secret.

The guests marched to the dining-room to Mendelssohn's wedding march, and "parfait amour" was served.

The rooms were prettily decorated with roses and greens n profusion. Progressive five hundred was played. Harry Vail won the first prize and the consolation prize went to Gilbert Martin. At 10 o'clock refreshments were served, after which a brief musical program was given.

WEDDINGS

The marriage of Miss Jewel McClure, daughter of Mrs. Margaret E. McClure of Portland Heights to Dr. William Frederick Fiebig of this city was celebrated Tuesday evening in the Unitarian church at 8 o'clock, Rev. W. G. Eliot officiating. The bride wore an empire gown of white silk voile made over taffeta and trimmed with duchesse lace and carried white sweet peas and maiden hair fern. Her veil was fastened with orange blossoms. She was given away by her brother, Fred McClure, and was attended by her sister, Miss Jean McClure, as maid of honor, and by Dr. Fiebig's sister, Mrs. William Channing Lovejoy of Seattle. The maid of honor was gowned in an imported dress of white chiffon embroidered in cherry blossoms. She carried carnations. Mrs. Lovejoy was handsome in pink voile. She carried carnations in the same shade. The musical service was rendered by Ralph W. Hoyt and Miss Cornelia Barker. Bert Dennison was best man, and the ushers were Messrs. Aye, Hallinah, C. J. Schnabel and Henry Berger. The church was effectively decorated with white roses, marguerites and greens.

A reception for the families and the bridal party was held after the ceremony at the charming house on Chapman street, Portland Heights, where Dr. and Mrs. Fiebig will make their home upon their return from their wedding journey. The bride's mother, three sisters and five brothers, including Frank McClure of Boise, Idaho, were present. Hon. W. Lair Hill, an uncle, came down from Seattle for the occasion.

Dr. and Mrs. Fiebig left on the late train for the sound cities and Victoria, to be gone for a short trip.

SLEEP IN A CITY TREE.

Flatbush Bay Makes His Summer Home in a Big Walnut.

From the New York Sun.

Sleeping outdoors in a rudely constructed house erected among the branches of a high walnut tree in the heart of Flatbush a young Polytechnic institute student has adopted a novel method of "getting near to nature." The tree sleeper will commence this way of sleeping just as soon as the weather begins to show signs of summer. Last year he tried this method of outdoor life, starting in the early spring and continuing until the first real snowfall of the season.

The "tree house," as the people in the neighborhood call it, is located on the lawn surrounding the home of Mrs. W. T. Lees, who lives at 1704 Flatbush avenue, near Avenue I, Flatbush. W. Thompson Lees is the tree dweller.

A wooden stairway winds around the tree's trunk leading to the single chamber above, allowing an easy ascent to be made. The structure is made of wood and was designed by young Lees and his chum, Vail Applegate, a freshman at Dartmouth college. The boys built the house a little more than two years ago, but it is only lately that they have converted it into a sleeping place.

At first their intention was simply to build a "crow's nest" where they could seclude themselves on rainy afternoons and days when it was too hot for active exercise. The "crow's nest" did not prove to be large enough, so the boys added a large platform which forms what they call their piazza. This piazza is roomy enough for an ordinary sized dining-room table and comfortably accommodates six or eight diners.

After Lees and Applegate had the house completed their parents took an interest in it. They recognized that it would be a fine place to sit in the warm weather. Mrs. Lees suggested that a stairway be added to enable the older folk to climb to the tree top. It took the boys three months to build it.

It was last summer that Lees and Applegate decided that they would like to see how it would feel to sleep out in the open. They covered the top of the house with panes of glass and this gave them all the light, day or night, they needed. The trial worked so well that they declared that thereafter they would, while the weather was warm, sleep in the tree.

"I Remember."

I remember, I remember,
The house where I was born,
And all the old back-breaking stunts
I did in early morn.
I remember, I remember,
The musty, dusty mows,
Where I would climb to pitch down hay
For thirty-seven cows.

I remember, I remember,
The 'tater patch I "bugged";
The buck-saw and the old sawbuck
And all the wood I lugged.
I remember, I remember,
The grindstone that I'd turn,
Ere mother rushed me in the house
To wrestle with the churn!

I remember, I remember,
The plows, the drags, the hoes,
And how I used to follow up
The long, weed-smothered rows.
I remember, I remember,
The corn-hills I would greet,
(And later sub the ointment on
The corns upon my feet!)

I remember, I remember,
The blazing, scorching sun;
The callouses upon my hands
Ere working hours were done.
I remember, I remember,
The long, unending day,
And how I nearly broke my back
While pitching loads of hay!
