WEATHER REPORT

A trough of low pressure extends from the central Canadian provinces southward to New Mexico this morning, and general rains have fallen during the last 24 hours over Washington, Oregon, Idaho, Utah and the Missouri valley. Over the southwest fair weather prevailed. An extensive high area overlies the northeastern portion of the country and clear skies prevail east of the Mississippi river.

The indications point to a continuation of the present cloudy and showery weather over this forecast district tonight and Thursday. It will probably be warmer over western Oregon Thursday.

THE RIVER.

The Snake and the upper Columbia rivers have risen very slowly during the last 24 hours. It is probable that the Willamette at Portland will reach a stage of 20.9 feet by Thursday morning and 21.1 feet by Friday morning.
