Top row—H. W. Lofgren, H. Coullara, F. W. Black, C. T. Finnegan, E. V. Legall, J. Gakey, P. Locke, J. J. Joyce. Lower row—O. H. Weisgerber, G. W. Holcomb, J. Neelon, A. J. O'Brien, R. A. McDonald, J. J. Mueller, E. T. Dooley, F. Hornby.

Hon. John M. Gearin, former United States senator from Oregon, delivered the address to the graduates of Columbia university at the commencement exercises held in the assembly hall last Wednesday. Senator Gearin's address was replete with wholesome advice to the young men who were upon the era of receiving their diplomas.

The faculty of the institution is a strong one, being composed of graduates and post graduates from some of the best institutions of learning in the east, and some of them members of one of the best teaching orders in the world.

The scientific courses have been strengthened and raised to the standard of the best in the west. The laboratories have been entirely remodeled and new and up-to-date apparatus installed in each. The commercial department and the courses in languages and arts are in the hands of trained and experienced instructors.

The Columbian college paper, is published monthly by the student body. Its object is to encourage literary activity among the students.

"Founder's day" is the red letter day of the year at Columbia. It was set

LOSES HIS FOOT BUT GETS NO DAMAGES

Emmet Lingle will receive no damages for the loss of his foot in the machinery of the Clark & Wilson lumber mill at Linnton. A jury that heard the testimony in the case so decided last night, returning a verdict in Judge O'Day's department of the circuit court about 8:30 o'clock after several hours spent in discussing the evidence. Lingle was crushed by a log while operating the machinery in the mill. He saw his danger and claimed that he would have escaped had it not been for rotten planking, which allowed his foot to sink through the floor. The defense was based on contributory negligence, alleging that he knew the danger and was injured through his own carelessness. He asked for $20,000 damages.

THIEF STEALS BRIDE'S CLOTHES ON WEDDING EVE

Detectives Smith and Kay last night solved the mystery of the $50 worth of women's wearing apparel which they found in the possession of Dan Fenton, who was trying to dispose of it on Fourth street when arrested some days ago. The apparel was a complete wedding outfit. It was the property of a wealthy Salt Lake City woman who had checked it in advance to Portland, where she was coming to attend a wedding. The clothing was in the rooms of the Terminal Transfer company at the union depot at the time it was stolen by Fenton. It was necessary for the party to whom it belonged to purchase a complete new wedding outfit when she arrived in Portland.

EAST SIDERS PLAN BOULEVARD

At a meeting of representatives from the United East Side Push clubs yesterday afternoon with City Engineer D. W. Taylor the plan of extending Grand avenue into a boulevard was practically abandoned in favor of purchasing a block bounded by Hancock, Schuyler, Grand and Union avenues which would accomplish the results desired by the push clubs.

The representatives consisted of Councilmen Wills, Menefee, Judge Munley and Rice and Steele. The committee expected to go over the plans submitted by Olmsted, the Boston landscape engineer, who was employed by the city but upon examining the maps and drawings left by the expert found that they consisted solely of contour drawings.

USED RESTAURANT HE DIDN'T OWN TO GOLDBRICK VICTIM

Alleged to have "sold" Philip Winter a restaurant at 367 Washington street for $550, G. W. Kerpenstein was arrested last night by Detectives Helyer and Maloney after a five hours' search of the city. Kerpenstein was arrested on description furnished by Philip Winter, a recent arrival in Portland, and the victim of Kerpenstein's alleged goldbrick scheme.

According to Winter's tale he first met Kerpenstein in his pretended place of business on Washington street. He changed to engage in conversation with him and Kerpenstein said he was anxious to sell, as he wanted to leave the city. The place was equipped to start up as a first-class restaurant. Kerpenstein, says Winter, offered to part with the establishment's equipment for $550. Winter thought it was a good purchase and the deal was closed by him transferring the amount in cash. He had not been in the place very long until the "ex-proprietor's" departure until a stranger came in and asked him what he was doing there. Winter told him he was preparing to open up in business. The new-comer informed him that he was the proprietor. He substantiated his claims by producing a check for $550. Winter visited the police station, where he unfolded his story to Captain Batey. Detectives Helyer and Maloney were immediately detailed on the case and Kerpenstein was located in a north side saloon. He denied all knowledge of the affair even when confronted with his alleged victim. He was brought to police headquarters and his bail fixed at $1,000. Up to a late hour he had not secured bail. The corner of an eye of a young man who has lost his sight, but whose cornea was intact, was grafted on the eye of Dr. Floyd Swinney of Forest, Ohio, whose sight was destroyed by an explosion, and he is able to see.
