bruises. Bad Reversed Motors. At the time of the collision Charles Rhundort, motorman of the incoming train, seeing that MoDougal was cer-train to run into him had stopped his train and was trying to get if started was just beginning to pick up beadway when the outbound train crashed into him. Had Rhundorf not taken this action the impact would have been ter-rific and the list of injured would sure-y have been much longer. The two trains came together just at the entrance of the switch of the anabel station. McDougal, at the con-trolier of the outgoing train, had stopped to allow a young woman to heed the block signals or to see the in-bound train coming down the track a digit and when he started on falled to heed the block signals or to see the in-bound train coming down the track a digit and when he started on falled to heed the block signals or to see the in-bound train coming down the track a digit and when he started of him. He did not notice the other train until aroused by the whisting of Motorman hundorf, when he timed to stop his train, but too late. Falled to Meed Signals. In the investigation this morning it
