Man Who Performed Wonderful Feat in Kansas, Coming to Oregon.

"Portland looks so good to me that I am going back to Iowa and sell what property I have there, with the intention of making my home on this coast," said Ora J. Gould, a land man who gained fame in 1891 by making the biggest farm deal ever known in the state of Kansas.

He is making a tour of the far west to secure a large tract of land that will be suitable for colonizing. The lands of the middle west and out on the edge of the frontier east of the divide, are taken by settlers and there is nothing left excepting the semi-arid lands of the intermountain states and Oregon.

The notable service that Mr. Gould performs for Kansas was the sale and colonizing of its largest tract of good lands, the moving of a town five miles and adding something like 500 families to the country's population, all in one year. He bought 28,000 acres for about $250,000, and subdivided it into small farms, selling the entire tract to farmers in Kansas, Iowa and Missouri.

"I never thought of any special prominence to be gained in the transaction," he said. "I was in the Kansas state house one day talking to the secretary of the state board of agriculture, when a reporter for the Topeka Capital came in and I was introduced to him. When he heard we were going to move a town to a new townsite on the tract, he took quite an interest in the story."

"Next morning there was a three-column article and a big line across the page, and a pen sketch that looked as much like me as the side of a house. The Journal man had also been to see me, and that paper came out the same day with a scorching story about the greatest project of colonizing and town building that ever struck Kansas."

"The fact was that when we cut the lands up we had to start a town, and the old townsite did not suit us. We agreed that if the inhabitants of the old town would trade lots with us and move five miles to our site, we would move their buildings free. This we did, and out any great difficulty, and a fine new town has grown up, with wide streets, stone and cement buildings and sidewalks, electric lights and other city conveniences."

Mr. Gould left this morning for Idaho to join his wife, who is visiting relatives.
