WEATHER REPORT

The barometer is relatively low over the intermountain states and a small depression is central north of Montana. The western high pressure area is now central over the middle Missouri valley, and the Lake Huron disturbance is disappearing at sea off the New England coast. The barometer is rising over western Oregon and western Washington. Light rain fell last night along the Oregon and Washington coasts and in portions of the Willamette valley and sound country. Rain also has occurred at scattered places in the states bordering on the Atlantic and gulf coasts. It is cooler in the lake region and Ohio valley, and generally warmer along the east slope of the Rocky mountains.

THE RIVER.

The stage of the river at Portland will be 19.2 feet Friday, 18.8 feet Saturday and 18.4 feet Sunday and it will continue to fall thereafter at the rate of about a half of a foot a day for several days.
