Outlook for Alaska Salmon.

The Alaska salmon pack is now on in full swing in the southeastern part of the territory. From special advices received today the run during the present serson will be an average one.

The market for Alaska fish is in the best possible shape, especially for the better grades. While the formal prices for the 1908 pack have not yet been named by the Alaska Packers association, the independent packers are already making sales at an advance of 10c for the better quality and the same prices as last year for the cheaper grades. These prices are, however, generally made subject to the opening figures announced by the Alaska Packers association.

Frank C. Barnes, the local cannery.

ures announced by the Alaska Packers association.

Frank C. Barnes, the local canneryman who is very heavily interested in salmon fishing and packing in southeastern Alaska, states that the market is excellent for reds around $1.20 as compared with the opening last year around $1.05. Later in the 1907 season reds sold as high as $1.15, and even at this figure stocks were soon exhausted, so heavy was the demand. The same condition rules in medium reds which are expected to open at $1 as compared with 90c a year ago.

Cheap Grados Carried Over.

Cheap Grades Carried Over.

Because of the carrying over of liberal supplies of pinks and chums from a year ago, it is not expected that there will be any advance in these two grades from the price that ruled a year agonot at least during the start of the season.

"The price of labor and material far in the price of labor and material far in the season."

not at least during the start of the season.

"The price of labor and material is so high." Mr. Barnes told The Journal this morning, "that the cheaper grades cannot be packed at the prices named a year ago and unless there is some improvement in the price the output will be small. There is a fair run of red is no at this time."

Mr. Barnes will leave at once for his Alaska holdings to personally investive the situation.

St. Louis Modern Miller says today:
"Recent rains have interfered with threshing and restricted the marketing of winter wheat. Many Illinois and Missouri millers were obliged to turn to St. Louis for wheat supplies. Settled weather enables farmers to resume threshing and millers report a resumption of wheat deliveries. Millers say that most of the farmers will hold their wheat for higher prices. Indiana reports that half of the wheat there goes to the seaboard for export. Northwestern millers are buying hard wheat in Kansas at strong prices. The quality and condition of new crop is excellent, most of the soft and hard winter grades number two."
