

GREAT CROWDS AT CHAUTAUQUA'S LAST DAY WALK NOT 1 MILE BUT TWO MILES

Great crowds marked the closing day of the Chautauqua assembly. Seldom has more intense heat been felt, or larger crowds assembled at Gladstone park. As early as 9 o'clock in the morning the cars came in drawing three trailers full of people, and this kept up until the last car before the evening program. Special pains were taken to keep the grounds well dampened and the visitors were relieved from the suffering of dust along with the heat.

The Day's Program

The morning was given almost entirely to rest and visiting, and but few devotional services were held. At 2 p. m. Dr. McIntyre preached to a congregation that filled every available space, even to standing room, in the auditorium. Taking for his text Philippians 4:22, "All the hearts of the household," he vividly portrayed the household of Caesar who at that time was Nero, whom he characterized as the wickedest man that ever lived. With his best and strongest powers of oratory the preacher painted, in blackest dye, a vision of the horrors that must have been to the salutes of Caesar's household, and the great lesson he drew from it was that the true Christian, the one with Christ in his heart, could rise above surroundings and in the foulest atmosphere, amid the purest, rarest blossoms of Christianity.

terday during the hour given to the Chinese service. Last Sunday the Japanese held a service, and during the week at a forum meeting the Indians would be heard, but it remained for the Chinese to form a form of entertainment, as well as problems, that member of the other races could see in the fine address of Rev. May Ling, which was given in very good English. He related how conversion had come to him 30 years ago and how he had given himself to the work at that time. It was a great and lonely struggle in early years, but today there are six well established Chinese missions in the city under the following denominations: Presbyterian, United Brethren, Christian, Methodist, Episcopal and Baptist. He touched upon his Chinese exclusion laws and regretted that it would keep his people from coming under Christian influences, and more rapidly becoming converted to Christ.

Good Singing Heard

Some of the singing was excellent and several notably fine voices which should receive patient and professional cultivation, which would undoubtedly prove them singers of more than ordinary ability. The song of tiny Grace Ling was charming and pathetic and almost brought tears to the eyes of the audience. Seid Back Jr., who is a Portland favorite, has a fine talent for music to other commendable qualities, and not only took part himself, but quietly directed many of the other singers. The following is the complete program: Scripture reading, Rev. Chan Sing Kai; prayer, Rev. Chan Sing Kai; solo, Harry Ding; address, "Work in Portland," Rev. May Ling; solo, "Hail Not to Temptation," Frank Kan; recitation, "A Storm at Sea," Fannie Chan; solo, "A Clean Heart," Howe Lee; piano solo, Ross Ling; solo, "Rock of Ages," Ross Ling; solo, "Gospel Bells," Mrs. S. K. Chan; address, "Missionary Work in China," Dr. C. S. Lee; quartet, "China," Mrs. George Tan, W. B. Moy, Harry Ding; solo, "God Wipes Away Our Tears," Seid Back Jr.; song, led by Seid Back and sung by audience, accompanied by Dr. C. S. Lee, cornet, "China for Christ," Mr. America.

Dr. Dyott Tells Why We Should More Than Meet Letter of Religion.

"Fall in love with the task you have to do, and count it a privilege to do more," said the Rev. Luther K. Dyott, pastor of the First Congregational church, during his sermon yesterday morning on "That Other Mile." Dr. Dyott said, in part: "Whosoever shall compel thee to go one mile, go with him two." Matt. v. 41. These are the words of Jesus Christ, taken from his sermon on the mount—the greatest sermon that was ever delivered in this world. The theme of this sermon of the world's supreme teacher is the kingdom of God. In this connection Jesus shows that the blessed life has its privileges to do more. One sentence in Psalm XIII's encyclical on labor which marked an epoch in modern views on that question may be ascribed to the same spirit if it came from the cardinal's own pen. It is the last word in the demand of a fair day's wage for a fair day's work: "There is a dictate of nature, imperious and more ancient than any barbarian between man and man, that the remuneration of the wage-earner must be enough to support himself and family in reasonable and frugal comfort."

theory that a just wage was determined by the imperious law of supply and demand. One sentence in Psalm XIII's encyclical on labor which marked an epoch in modern views on that question may be ascribed to the same spirit if it came from the cardinal's own pen. It is the last word in the demand of a fair day's wage for a fair day's work: "There is a dictate of nature, imperious and more ancient than any barbarian between man and man, that the remuneration of the wage-earner must be enough to support himself and family in reasonable and frugal comfort."

Other Requisites

"The spirit is more than the letter. The virtue, and validity, and solid worth of religion must ever be found in the motive and real meaning of the life, where religion is not merely a profession, but a possession. Here the voluntary must find its glory beyond the compulsory. It is not simply that which we have and give, but that which we are, and do, beyond the precept and rigid requirements of duty, which gives real worth to practical religion, and bids the commonplace blossom with the beauty of the divine. "Whosoever shall compel thee to go one mile, go with him two. What did Jesus mean when he uttered these words? The text must be explained in the light of customs, at that time and previously existent, which afforded the imagery of this series of scripture. It took its color from the courier system, so felicitously described by Herodotus. It denoted a certain authority of requisition where, in military transport, ships, vehicles, beasts and men could be placed in compulsory service. If, as a messenger, you were on his way from the court to a province, he had the right to compel any man he might chance to find on the road to accompany him. If the man loved his king, his country and the cause, he would count it a privilege to do more than go the required distance. In the case of the persons who were content to do the things they had to do. He showed them that to do would not only prompt them to do these things, but more.

Three Aims in Life

"Now larger life asks for enterprise and progress. These, in turn, demand character, service and nobles and unselfish souls, who will be able to do other things. The whole majesty, and meaning, and power, and poise of life must ever depend upon three things, for which three words stand. These words are: Be, go, do! "We must be somebody. Too long have we been saying, 'O, I am nothing.' It is better to say, 'I am something, something.' Life may be repetitive and cyclic, but it is never static. It must move. To stop means to stagnate. Where progress ends, life begins. We must go all the way. Life's first and second mile may be the same, but the third mile is not the same. It is the third mile that counts. One stands for the compulsory, the other for the voluntary. Each is to have its merit. My plea is for that other mile in the religious life. "The immediate danger of our times is that religion may not keep pace with material and commercial enterprise and progress. Men make business go. They build up great business institutions, but enterprise is not lacking in our so-called secular pursuits. These things are good as far as they go, but they do not go far enough.

Keep Up Religion

"Our religion should never be a mile behind our business. The same men who progress in material things should make equal progress in spiritual things. We cannot serve God by proxy. Progress should not be in some things only; but in all things. Try that other mile. The greater glory of life is at the end of that other mile. Do the things that you have to do with a new spirit. Fall in love with the task you have to do. Count it a privilege to do more. Then, only then, shall you find that "Life is joy, and love is power; Death all fetters doth unbind; Strength and wisdom only flower. When we toll for all mankind, Hope is truth, the future giveth. More than present takes away, And the soul forever liveth. Nearer God from day to day." "Try that other mile. Start now."

CARDINAL'S CENTENARY

Great Prelate's Anniversary Celebrated at St. Mary's. Cardinal Manning's centenary was celebrated at St. Mary's cathedral yesterday morning and Father O'Hara taking as his subject, "The Church of the People," told of what the great prelate's life work in behalf of the laboring people had meant both for them and for his church. Last week the laborers of London gathered in an enormous mass meeting out of respect for the cardinal and this meeting was spoken of by Father O'Hara in his address. "Cardinal Manning came forward in the middle of the 19th century as the champion of the workingman against the dictatorial illusions of political economy." He raised his voice in powerful protest against the prevalent "Don't let foolish people fool you by telling you that when you do a little bit more you are not working for yourself, but for your employer, and simply increasing his wealth, for every added effort of your life makes your employer stronger, fits and prepares you for the man who has around the corner ready to take a little bit more than he is paid for."

POISON OAK POISONING

Ballard's Snow Liniment cures it. Dr. G. H. P. Turner, Oregon writes: "My wife has discovered that Snow Liniment cures Poison Oak Poisoning, a very painful trouble. She not only cured a case of it on herself, but on two of her friends who were poisoned by this same plant. One of the friends was cured in 10 days and the other in 15 days. Sold by Skidmore Drug Co."

GOOD CHANCE FOR BRIGHT YOUTHS

Journal Scholarship Contest Offers an Opportunity Not to Be Overlooked.

Lena Berkrom, a contestant from the southern Oregon district, is a bright and energetic young girl, and was born at Siuslaw 18 years ago. After a short time her parents moved to the Umpqua life-saving station, where her mother died when she was 3 years of age. Later years when Lena was not at school she kept house for her father at the station.

Lena graduated from the tenth grade and wishes to advance more in her studies so that she may become a teacher. Lena is a very pretty girl and is loved by all who know her. All the life-savers will come to her support as well as Gardner people. She intends canvassing all the country far and wide around Gardner, including Florence, Scottsburg, Elkton and Drain and all the way to the coast. Lena is a motherless girl, who desires an education, will be sure to rally to her support and assist her with their own subscriptions and their infirmities.

Ambitious boys and girls should find a valuable moral in the following written by John Anderson, lawyer, working a little more in The Journal scholarship contest students will secure a little more money, you've got to make a little bit more. This is applicable to subscription work as any other work, and then some.

"The and then some" principle holds good in pretty nearly every department of life.

"The man who is not afraid to do a little more than he is paid for doing is usually the man who gets there with both feet pointing upward in the path of better things.

"Men who simply do the stunt that the boss has laid out for them usually do it with a whine and a grunt, making life miserable and uncomfortable for all with whom they come in contact. Shirkers are never companionable workers.

"The man who is satisfied only when he has done just a little more than he has been asked to do, is the man who sings about his work and whistles in his task. He is the man who makes the place vibrate with his cheerfulness and keeps everyone around him in good nature.

"Invariably the man who shirks in his work is a man who makes trouble in the works. The shirkers are jerks, and a well known fact among men who are in the habit of giving employment to men. The man who is willing to do all the he can stand is ready to work a few minutes after the whistle blows, if necessary, is the man who, with the passage of the years, rises from the ranks of the employes to the office of employer.

"It is all too well to say that a man in a big establishment is unnoticed. But since time began, the old proverb, 'Even a child is known by his doings,' has obtained. The child who has the child holds good in the life and work of the man, it matters little how humble the work, if it is done with a will. 'Seest thou a man diligent in his business, he shall stand before kings; he shall not stand before mean men.' Holds true to life today as it did thousands of years ago when the wise men of the past first recognized the truth and put it into the form of words.

Watch for Opportunities

"It is the men who watch for opportunities to do a little bit more who get the chances to make good in larger and more responsible positions. The man with the open eyes always finds an open door. There are very few real geniuses in the world, but capacity for them they are paid for brings many for the man of mediocre ability to positions where there are splendid opportunities for working to the full limit of his capacity.

"The man who does a little bit more than he is paid for in the market finds that his resources for the accomplishment of more and better work are unfolding. He who uses the little that he has will find that little to be like the widow's cruise of oil, never ending. In falling there is always a little bit more for the man willing to do a little bit more.

"Men with the little bit more spirit have made possible all the great inventions that have made this era the most remarkable era that man has known since time began.

"Fulton, having the little bit more spirit, gave the steamboat. Morse, having the little bit more spirit, gave the electric telegraph. Stephenson, having the little bit more spirit, gave the locomotive. Cyrus W. Field, having the little bit more spirit, gave the Atlantic cable. Bell, Edison, Marconi and a host of others of whom the little bit more spirit have struck high chimes in the annals of time and sent the knowledge of their gifts to the ends of the earth. The little bit more spirit has transformed life and the world, and has opened a new and grand and new field for the strength of their heart and brain.

What Do More

GLASSY NAGS TO SHOW THEIR SPEED

Finest Harness Horses on Coast Will Compete at Country Club Races.

Ground will be broken within the next two or three days for the steel and concrete cantilever grandstand at the Country club racetrack. The excavating and grading will take but a few days, and the concrete material, with the lumber for the molds, and all but a small portion of the structural steel has been laid down at the grandstand site during the past week.

The end of the present week will also see the completion of the grading of the race course and from then on it will be turned over to the big gang of surfacers who have completed quite a stretch of the oval already.

It is announced that nominations in all classes for the "late closing" harness race event will be received up to Saturday, September 5, in these events will be found some of the finest racing stock on the coast, pacers and trotters that for one reason and another could not be listed in the early closing events. Notable among the performers in these events will be the classy Kuster-Erwin string from Laramie, Wyo., now going through some "warming-up" stunts at Hillsboro preparatory to the opening of the circuit next month at Bellingham. Other classy speeders from Lewiston, San Francisco, Salt Lake and from Montana and Colorado points have been heard from in the past few days, and are for the rich purses hung up by the club.

The street railway company Saturday finished stringing the double trolley wires out the Montavilla and Rose City Park lines to the points where the two loops will be extended to the racetrack. It is expected that permission to lay the temporary tracks over the intervening streets will be secured so that the work may be continued without any material delay. The building and concession committees are working out plans for the housing and other accommodations for the hundreds of people who will be located at the grounds during the races and stock show. Camping grounds, to accommodate most of them will be staked out, and concessions for food supplies and other provisions will be awarded within a week or so.

To achieve more, you must attempt more.

"To win more, you must fight more. To do more, you must think more, work more.

"He who is satisfied in the todays of life will never come to the great tomorrow with the passage of the years. As mountain peaks catch the first rays of the morning sun and are bathed in its lingering, bright light, so the man who does a little more and then some, finds new joys every morning and fresh delights with the passing of the hours.

"Don't let foolish people fool you by telling you that when you do a little bit more you are not working for yourself, but for your employer, and simply increasing his wealth, for every added effort of your life makes your employer stronger, fits and prepares you for the man who has around the corner ready to take a little bit more than he is paid for."

Brooklynites Glad They're in Oregon

First Congregational Entertains 135 Visitors From the East. The First Congregational church entertained the 135 members of the Cortelyou club of New York last night. During the evening speeches were made by Dr. Luther K. Dyott, pastor of the church, Tom Richardson of the Commercial club and E. L. Thompson, representing the Portland hosts, while J. Harry Snook replied in behalf of the members of the visiting organization. The Cortelyou club is a social organization of New York and the party of members is making an annual tour of the United States. The party left New York July 2 and expects to return to New York by August 2, after having made a big circuit of the principal cities and points of interest throughout the country. The addresses last night were all in favor of Portland and of Oregon, the climate, the people, the products and the workingman. He interpreted the spirit of the Catholic church to his country. As a true apostle of the church of the future, a messenger like his divine master, had compassion on the multitude who labored and were heavily burdened in the struggle of life."

LARGE CROWD AT DECAPRIO CONCERT

A larger crowd than ever thronged the City park yesterday afternoon to hear the band concert. The fact that the thermometer climbed to the 92-degree mark did not seem even to keep back the people. But they were well rewarded for coming out, for not only was the music good, but the fine old trees offered inviting shade and, being at a much greater elevation than the city, the hill with the bandstand was swept by a cool, refreshing breeze.
