MEMBERS OF FOUR GENERATIONS OBSERVE SAME DATE OF BIRTH

"Many happy returns of the day, Niece Alice, and to you Niece Lois and to you Niece Ethel—and then they all chimed. "And many happy returns to you, Aunt Alice."

For there were four generations gathered in the yard of Mrs. R. H. Dunn, 195 East Belmont street, to celebrate the common birthday of four of Mrs. Dunn's family.

Those who had birthdays were Mrs. R. H. Dunn, 195 East Belmont street; Mrs. Dunn's niece, Mrs. Alice Combs, 330 East Yamhill street; Mrs. Dunn's great niece, Mrs. Lois Matthews, of Twenty-eighth and Glisan streets, and Mrs. Dunn's great, great-niece, little Ethel Matthews. All were born on August 5 and all celebrate their birthdays together each year.

This time the celebration was at Mrs. Dunn's where the nieces were the guests of their aunt at a garden party and where all exchanged gifts in remembrance of the occasion. In the photograph Mrs. Dunn is standing at the right, Mrs. Combs is beside her and Mrs. Matthews is seated, holding her little girl on her lap.

While lighting a bundle of sticks for a fire a viper fastened on the apostle's hand. St. Paul calmly shook the reptile off into the flames and no harm followed. The natives wear these stones as talismans, in which character they suppose them serviceable in warding off dangers from snake bites and poisons.

They are found in St. Paul's cave, imbedded in clay, and are set in rings and bracelets, and when found to be in the shape of a tongue or liver or heart are hung around the neck. They are also taken internally, dissolved in wine, which method is attended, according to some people, by more immediate results.

TALISMANS IN MALTA

Odd-Shaped Stones to Ward Off Effects of Snake Poison.

From the London Standard.

There are still to be found in Malta a number of small stones, shaped and colored like the eyes, tongues and other parts of serpents.

The superstitious among the Maltese connect these with the tradition that St. Paul, when shipwrecked was cast on their island and that it was there that

MOTHER FOX'S CUNNING.

Her Ineffectual Plans to Divert Hunters' Attention From Den. Hagerstown Correspondence Indianapolis News.

Hunters found a den of foxes in the hills south of Hagerstown and unearthed five little ones about as large as well before the hunters reached the den, which was lined thickly with soft grasses and feathers. Instead of running away she kept within sight while the hunters worked with their shovels.

She apparently understood what they were doing, for she endeavored by every means to attract them away from their work, and toward herself. She frequently proached quite near and acted as if lame and distressed. She would lie down on her side and stare along the ground, uttering wiles and moans. Then she would limp off as if very lame, going very slowly and halting frequently.

The hunters were not to be drawn away from the work on hand by such tactics, and after some digging dug out upon the den where the five pretty little fellows were shrinking. They made no resistance and seemed rather to like the handling and petting they received. All of them were taken to a farmhouse, where they are confined. They will not be released, but will probably be patiently despatched. Grown foxes do not make good neighbors in farming communities, and it is very rare for mother foxes to leave all their young in one place. It is their cunning habit to scatter the family one and two in widely separated retreats. It is said that foxes will not rob roosts close to their dens, but will go miles away for food and carefully hide their trails.

A Mirror Problem.

"I won't name the church," said the architect's young man. "It is one that stood in need of repairs a short while ago. My boss got the job of putting it in order. I attended to most of the preliminary details, and I give you my word that in the list of improvements recommended by the committee was a lot of small mirrors to be put into the backs of the chaises, either in the paws or set as panels in the walls."
