

HOW TENT-DWELLERS FIND LIFE WORTH LIVING

Summer Camps at the Edge of the City Where One Can Enjoy All the Beauties of Woods--Outdoor Pleasures That Are Within Reach of Everyone Who Lives in Portland

RAIRING OUT

DEEP down in the heart of every human, bred of the customs of centuries past, is the desire to live out in the open, to sleep under the stars, lulled by the songs of the pine trees and soothed by the murmuring laughter of the rivulets.

Down under the crust of convention and the veneer of civilization, in the hearts of every one, is the yearning to get out under the bright blue sky away from the brick and the towering pillars of stone to where the breezes blow fresh from the sea and the mountain and the very silence hums with the absence of the hum of the city.

Out here along the western edge of the world it is different. The sun sends down no molten shafts to melt the narrow spaces of the brain. People do not wilt in the face of the wind. It may be warm, but it is seldom hot.

There are few cities in the country where on every edge just out of hearing of the noise and rattle of the streets and cars on a camping bench can pitch his tent among the trees and be with nature.

People of New York, stricken by the summer and wilted down by the furnace breath of the city turn their faces up to where far above them they can see little streaks of sky along the topmost rims of the man-made canyons of brick and stone and steel, and dreaming of the woods and streams, they sigh and the sky dies.

A CAMP SHOWER, BATH.

There is a more hopeful side to the picture which, however, consists largely of anticipation as yet. Of the 15 registration states, five have been added since 1906.

During the present summer to a greater extent perhaps than at any former time the outdoor homes have made their appearance. Under the trees of the Portland hills you will find them scattered here and there surrounded by hammocks and rugs and cozy lounging nooks, pleasant places to live the simple life.

GLASS HOUSES--The Vital and Sanitary Statistics of Turkey are Mere Jokes

Cressy L. Wilbur, Chief Statistician, U. S. Census (Exclusive Service, Charities and Commons Press Bureau.)

IN ONE respect at least, Turkey is ahead of most countries; that is, in the lack of vital and sanitary statistics. They tell a story about Turkey which made the following replies to questions regarding the death and birth rates in his country.

Question--What is the death rate in your province (country)?

The Turk answers--In Damascus, it is the will of Allah that all should die. Some die young, and some die old.

Question--What is the annual number of births?

The Turk--God alone can say--I do not know, and hesitate to inquire.

ALFRED FARLOW REPLIES TO DR. CABOT'S CRITICISMS

Christian Science Defended Against Attacks Which Appeared in McClure's

By Alfred Farlow.

THE following letter addressed to the editor of the Boston Post replies to Cabot's criticism in McClure's Magazine on Christian Science.

Dr. Cabot's criticism in McClure's Magazine on Christian Science is a somewhat blurred, and "organic disease is oftentimes produced by functional diseases" and "such organic diseases is often cured by Christian Science."

Champagne Baths for Jaded Society Women

From a Staff Correspondent.

LONDON, July 15--London is responsible for the invention of the now famous "lemon baths" which are said to have done so much for the complexion of Queen Wilhelmina of Holland.

Another of madame's specialties is "pearl dust," which is obtained from crushed pearls and is supposed to give great brilliancy to the neck and arms.

Dr. Quimby, according to many reliable witnesses, never recognized God in his treatment of the sick. John Chapman, a well known and reliable citizen of Bangor, Maine, who knew Mr. Quimby intimately, said that he never talked about God, he was not a religious man in any sense, though a good man morally and a good citizen.

Preceding, the doctor declares, "The sharpness of this distinction between organic and functional troubles is somewhat blurred," and "organic disease is oftentimes produced by functional diseases" and "such organic diseases is often cured by Christian Science."

Would Have an Equal Chance.

Then the organic class would have an equal chance with the functional group. Not very long ago, one medical authority went so far as to declare that many organic diseases were nervous disorders. Such an authority adds still more to the confusion as he begins to wonder, if, after all, our medical brethren know any more about the real nature and cause of the disease than Christian Science.

Visual proof that the earth moves is furnished at Columbia University, New York, where a pendulum 51 feet long, suspended from the dome of a chapel, swings several inches out of the perpendicular.
