HIT AVALANCHE STRIKES SEALS

Champions Pound Skillman and Jones All Over Lot—Briswalter Effective.

(Hearst News by Longest Leased Wire.)

Los Angeles, Aug. 23.—With the team behind him flogging the ball like so many fiends, little Andy Briswalter, the bonniest one of the Angels' cub pitchers, won his game, 11 to 2, today, letting the San Francisco men down with five widely scattered hits.

The Angels batted like so many demons. Skillman, who started to pitch for the Seals, was batted out of the box in the fifth inning. Oscar Jones then tried his hand against the Dillonites, being walloped for two or more hits every inning thereafter, his delivery being slaughtered.

The sum total of the batfest on the part of the white waists was 15 safe hits. Included in this number was a home run over the center field fence by Rube Ellis, two doubles by Dillon and additional two-base hits by Wheeler and Delmas, to say nothing of the 10 singles.

The Mohlerites got away to the good, making one run in the first inning and another in the third. The champions were shut out without a sign of a hit or run until the fourth inning, when they came through with an avalanche of hits, scoring six men. The score:

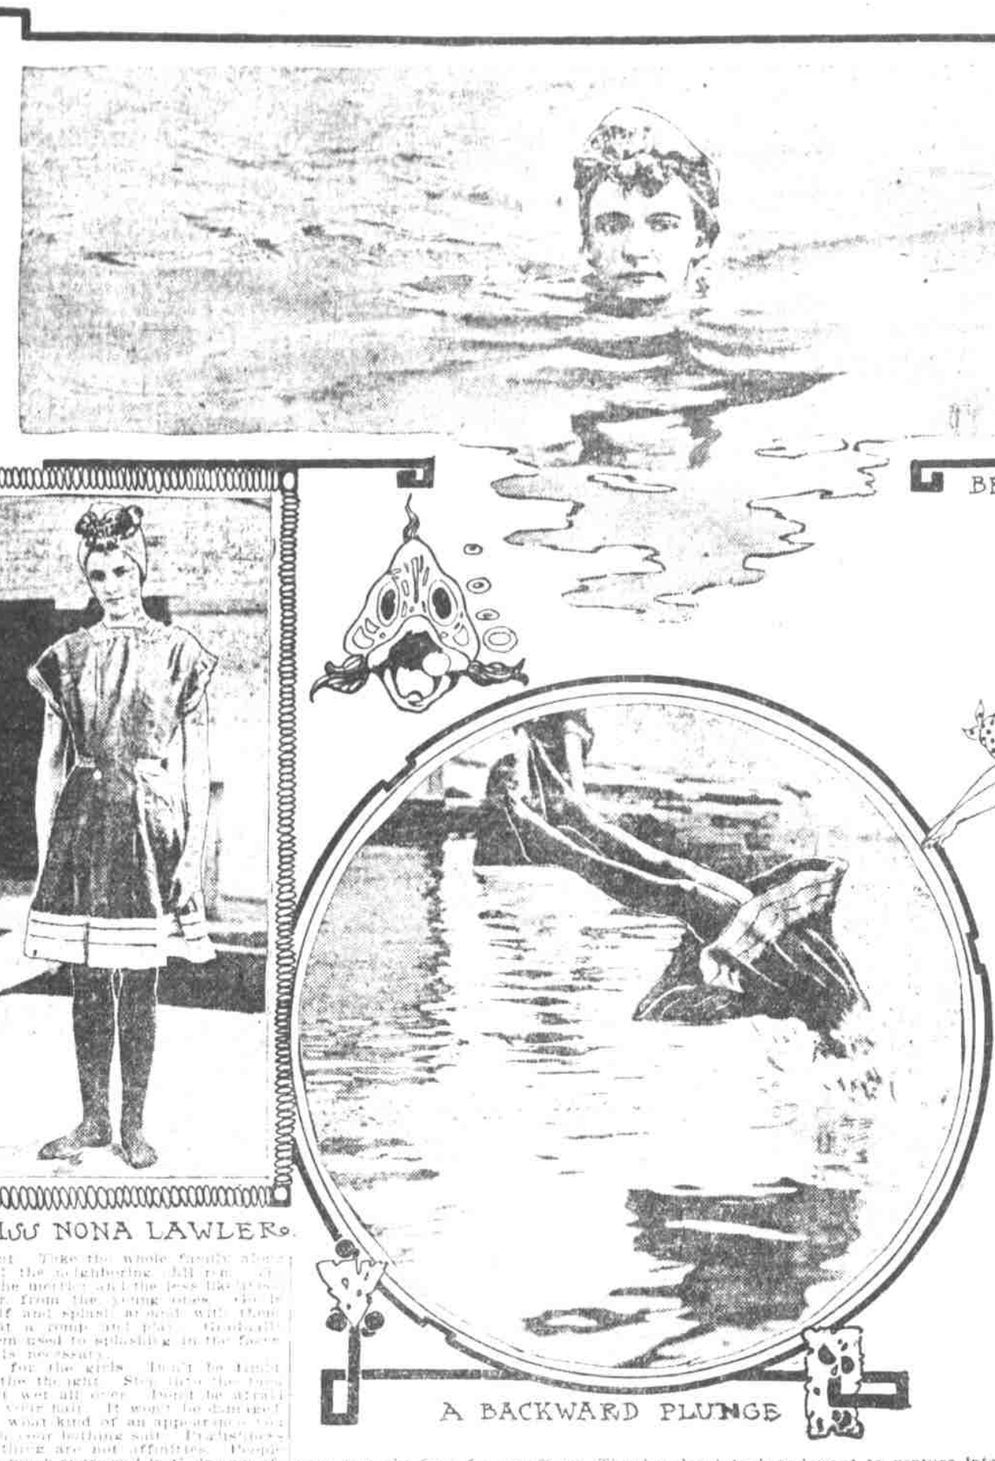
SWIMMING---ITS PLACE IN THE LIFE OF PORTLAND'S FEMININE POPULATION

A HIGH DIVE

MISS NONA LAWLER.



A BACKWARD PLUNGE

By Nona Lawler.

Were I all powerful I would compel women and girls to learn to swim. First, I would let them know the pleasure in store for them and then I would teach them the benefit to be derived from a thorough course. I should not stop until ever, one had become proficient and thoroughly able to take care of herself under the most trying circumstances. I would make it a matter of self-protection as much as a matter of entertainment. I can truthfully say from what experience I have had on the water that no one should venture out in a small boat who is unable to swim.

After entertainment and a means of possible self-preservation, there is the excellent physical result to be considered. There is no better exercise known for the body. While the body is floating in the water there is no tax on any portion of it and the sinews, unable to stop the full benefit from the free and easy motion of the muscles. Left to herself a woman would make little use of her latent muscles. With persuasion she can be made to develop them to the fullest. This exercise is bound to strengthen her whole system and build up her health.

Attack on Grownups.

For the woman or girl a victim of ennui, there is no better tonic known. As a banisher of morbidness it has no equal. As an accomplishment it ranks high.

I hardly know where to begin when it comes to encouraging women to learn to swim. Perhaps it is better to attack the adult one and through them feed the children. Women should be practical in all they do. If they were it to their children to make them swimmers just as habitually as they do to defend their minds. It is as much a part of their education as their daily school-room lessons. There may come a time when it is a matter of life and death with the child it should be prepared for the critical moment.

Any healthy woman will take to water like a duck after the first plunge. Even fear of it will not last long before the delightful sensation of the bubbling cold water will tempt her to try. Practice in position of the body and the kick is the first step. Don't be afraid to put your head under. Don't attempt some fancy stroke while learning. Just float and kick. Let it go down when it will. Then take pleasure by slapping water in front. Let it go down, floating and swimming and be careful to see that your head will be frozen with fear. The shock it gets is not good for it. It means it is to be likely hurt. Soothe the child and urge it to try again. Instead of its thoroughly returning it will be eager to return again. It is not doing the right thing by the youngster.

Make these trips to the baths more than occasional affairs. Take the whole family along and all the neighboring children. The more the merrier and the less like fear. Get from the young ones the idea that yourself and splash around with them. Make it a romp and play. Gradually get them used to splashing in the water for it is necessary.

Now for the girls. Don't be timid. Expel the fright. Step into the water and get wet all over. Don't be afraid to wet your hair. It won't do damage. Forget what kind of an appearance you make in your bathing suit. Practicalness and nothing are not affinities. People are too much engrossed in their own affairs to take more than passing notice of you.

Everybody has to learn and every one is charitable around the baths. There is none to make fun of your efforts. They are pleased to look at those who want to learn.

Watch the best swimmers. When you have passed beyond the stage of the enclosed tank and want to venture into the deep, get some friend to swim near you to prevent possible accident. Imitate the graceful strokes of the best swimmers. Copy them all. Improve upon them if you can. Be versatile. It's a near cry from the bashful girl afraid to step into the water to the expert swimmer.

Fleshy women have shown a hesitancy to appear in a bathing suit. Forget your appearance, forget everything but your desire to know how. Refined people realize your feelings and think more of you for having tried. As a flesh reducer swimming is a success. Your pleasure is so pronounced that you never think of the work you are doing. Really, the woman who appears large in street garments is not so large in bathing dress. You are too self-conscious. You just imagine it.

Dress Severe Handicap.

Dress is our severest handicap. Like hundreds of others I trust our proud conventions will give latitude some day for absolute comfort. I shall view with pleasure the adoption generally of the style of dress recently introduced to the European watering places and generally in vogue in England. They are almost form-fitting and closely resemble those of the men. In the exclusive Bath bathing suits of London they are worn almost entirely. What a pleasure it would be to glide through the water unhampered by trailing skirts.

Truly I envy the men and I think hundreds of other women do the same. Some enthusiast married men who are instructors very sensibly tell us to don the more modest of men's suits. But unfortunately all the world is not broad minded. For 11 years I have suffered the drawbacks of a cumbersome alpaca suit. Some day I may enjoy the freedom of the European dress. I hope that day is not far distant.

THOUSANDS PAID FOR YOUNGSTERS

When, or rather at what figure, will the major league magnates quit buying minor league players? This year's bunch of minor league graduates will be the most costly ever turned out by the minor leagues and next will not be in as great a number as they have been formerly.

One hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars is playing the amount paid out this year conservatively, and when the list of players drafted is turned in the total will be swelled many thousands. The American association alone will have sold seven players for the round sum of $48,000, while the New York league has already made arrangements for the sale of players who will bring in the neighborhood of $50,000. Just as nearly as many players in trade as have been sold.

The record established by the American association of selling seven players for a total of $48,000 is the record in baseball history. Leagues have been robbed of all their most promising players by draft and purchase, but never before has such a figure been paid for seven ball players.

Oregon's New Football Coach

Robert W. Forbes, Yale, '07.

Robert W. Forbes, Yale '07.

For the first time in history Yale football which has proved the downfall of every opposing college in the eastern championship games for several years, will be introduced in the northwest through the medium of Robert W. Forbes, the new coach at the University of Oregon. Forbes, who is located at Ballard, Wash., is expected to reach the university about the middle of September and will commence work with the material as soon as it arrives at the college.

Forbes has an interesting history in a football way. He began his football career at the Dalton, Mass., High school. After graduation he entered Wesleyan university at Middleton, Conn., in the fall of 1902 and played guard and tackle on the college team in 1902 and 1903. He also played behind the line in a few games. He was elected captain for the next year, but never returned, going instead to Yale university at New Haven. He was ineligible in 1904, owing to the year's residence rule, but played with the second eleven.

The following year Rob made the varsity with ease, being assigned a position at left tackle. He was chosen by nearly every authority for the All-American eleven. In the fall of 1906 he was moved to end and played brilliantly. He again made the All-American eleven.

Forbes is a big man, weighing over 200 pounds. In addition he is very fast. He also has a good record as an all-round athlete. He graduated from Yale in 1907 and was a general favorite in New Haven.

Last season Forbes coached the Army eleven at West Point and whipped a great team out of the material at hand. His team ranked tenth on the list of all the colleges and might have ranked higher had not injuries impaired its effectiveness. Forbes was chosen from a list of an applicants for the position of coach at Oregon. He came west to learn the lumbering business, and is located at Ballard, Wash.

Glen Armspiger of Pendleton, the All-Northwest tackle, who is barred from playing this season by the conference rules, will assist Forbes in coaching.
