

GANS WORKS DEMON TO BE FIT FOR HIS BATTLE

How the Other Fighters are Training For Next Big Contests

By W. W. Naughton.
(Special News by Longest Leased Wire.)
San Francisco, Aug. 29.—There was never such an opportunity of studying fighters in training and the mood that possess them as there is at present. Every camp around the bay is in full blast and as the events of the men of the gloves are preparing for are of vast importance, the work that is being done is of most serious character.

Joe Sims, for one, is a study. He feels that he trifled away his time when getting ready for Nelson before he had determined to make no mistake this time. A touch of adversity has surely chastened Joseph. When he was preparing for Nelson, he did little or no boxing, and he became fluffed when anyone suggested that he had better do some boxing. As a matter of fact, he was seldom seen in the gymnasium at all and he is backing to draw on the men who boxed last season alone. It has dawned upon him that what is best for a man who has made his way to the front by his own prowess is to practice in the thing he is good at.

Some very disturbing rumors have come east in regard to Sims' appearance.

To the writer Gans looks better right now than he has at any time since he boxed Kid Herman at Weopah. His face is not drawn, and his frame doesn't look as though weight-making had bothered him. If there is any difference in Gans it is that his legs seem lighter than they used to be, but his legs are still sturdy enough and sprightly enough to carry him over ring space at a fast clip. He is in his afternoon spars with his camp-mates.

Alto Attell is also a thoughtful young man just at present. There was a story around after the last contest that Attell had simply tried to throw away with Owen Moran in order to stimulate a betting when the inevitable return date should come along. The solemn manner in which Attell has been working over at Croft's is the best answer to the rumor that he trifled with the English boy last time. Also has all the earmarks of a fellow who knows he is about to undertake something highly important and is wondering how it will turn out. There are no inopportunities in anything Attell does, but his mind is care-free on the subject of weight-making. He is at his notch now and is just doing enough to keep him right up to the standard of his former perfect, and so far as everything pertaining to good condition is concerned, there isn't a man in the city who is better.

Owen Moran, over at Shannan's, is angry at Attell for collecting weight in the last battle and is speaking of the labor day affair as though it were more of a grudge fight than a tussle for championship honors.

Like Gans, Moran sees the benefit of plenty of glove work, and he is never so happy as when a bunch of volunteer sparring partners turn up of an afternoon and signify their willingness to oblige. According to Tim Keating, who is directing Owen's preparation, the cocky Britisher doesn't care a rap how big his camp opponents are. He likes variety in the boxing line and he argues that if he has plenty of slugging matches with men who outreach and outweigh him it will make Attell seem all the smaller by comparison.

About the only one of the quartet of September champions he identifies who has no regrets nor worries is Battling Nelson. The bona fide says he is simply going to show the public that his other victory over Gans was not a fluke. The only thing necessary, in his mind, is that he be properly trained, and as he is always conscientious about his work and finds training no hardship, his flow is like a song for him at Milliet's.

Young Ketchel is beginning to experience the troubles that are inseparable from success in the prize ring. While he was working his way to the front he was careful not to let anyone in on his secret, but now that he is being looked for by the public, he wants to discriminate, and public opinion will not let him. If Ketchel wins from Parke at Jeffrey's Los Angeles club on Labor day there will be such a demand for a Ketchel-Langford contest that the manager of the latter will not allow Ketchel to match with a colored man, so there is a prospect of form, the more particularly as it is believed Ketchel is chafing at the prospect and would as soon tangle Langford as anybody.

TWO BIG ELEVENS SIGN AGREEMENT TO PLAY CHAMPIONSHIP GAME HERE

Three Yale Stars to Coach Oregon For Gridiron Battles

At a meeting of the athletic managers of the University of Oregon and the Oregon Agricultural college held in this city yesterday afternoon, a contract was signed whereby the annual football game between these institutions will be played in the Oregon stadium, November 21 of this year. Arrangements have been made with the Multnomah Athletic club for the use of Multnomah Field for the game date and plans are now being perfected whereby excursions will be made to the game from Eugene, Corvallis and Albany.

From present indications the coming game between the two schools will be one of the greatest athletic events ever seen in the Northwest. Expert football men believe that Oregon and O. A. C. will have the two best teams in the Northwest this season and that the game on November 21 will settle the championship of the Northwest for the year.

A. C. won last year's game by a score of 4 to 0 and there is a feeling at Corvallis that the tables must be turned this season.

The Agriculturalists will be coached by E. S. Norcross, the famous Michigan quarterback, who has coached at Corvallis for the past two years. He will have as his able corps of assistant coaches and trainers, Corvallis will bring the team with seven of last year's eleven—Walt, captain and fullback, Gagnon, quarterback, Cooper, half, football, right guard, Lambson, start tackle, Kelly, center and backer, left guard, Bennett, the crank left tackle of last season, team captain, and a number of others about as good as any in the Northwest. Only one of them, however, has graduated. There will be a total of 25 players from last year's team, and a number of new men of ability. The Agriculturalists will play William, and one or two more stars in line. Then the game here and the university will play William, and one or two more stars in line. Then the game here and the university will play William, and one or two more stars in line.

Oregon has good prospects. Although Eugene has lost a number of her best men the outlook for a successful season is bright. The actual football will arrive on September 29, and will begin work immediately. He will be assisted by "Doc" Anagnost, the fast Oregon tackle, who has been declared ineligible because of the four year rule.

Yale stars to coach Oregon for gridiron battles. The Oregon football team will be coached by three Yale stars, who will arrive in Eugene on September 29. CUBS DEFEAT GOTHAM NINE

Chicago Beats Great Mathewson

Chicago, Aug. 29.—Before the largest crowd that ever attended a baseball game the Chicago Nationals won the second game of the series from New York by a narrow margin of one run after a sensational battle.

Mathewson, the three-fingered marvel, pitched a strong game for the Cubs, allowing only five hits. The Cubs' pitchers would have been proud of this had it not been for careless errors on the field. The Cubs made all their runs in the fourth inning.

Mathewson gave the crowd a good show, but he was not able to keep the Cubs out of the lead. The Cubs scored three runs in the fourth inning, and the game was over.

SOCCER GAME BEGINS

More Than 100 Men to Report for Practice Next Month—Six City Teams

The annual meeting of the Portland Association Football club will be held probably before September 19, after which date preparations for the fall and winter soccer season will be on in earnest. Practice is expected to begin by September 15 and it is hoped the regular city league schedule can be got under way by the first Saturday in October. There are some 100 men who will be in their glory through all kinds of weather until the end of next March, when the game is supposed to give way to football.

Just what form the city league will take this year is still undecided. It is expected that the clubs will be organized by the first of next month. There are six city teams expected to report for practice next month.
