

POPULAR OLD HICKORY JUDGE ADVISES WOMAN TO GO JUMP INTO THE LAKE

They Began Their Political Careers Together in 1824, in Which Year Aristocratic Rule Got Its Finish—Enter Tammany.

By FREDERIC J. HASKIN.

Washington, Sept. 1.—"Let the people rule!" cried the supporters of Andrew Jackson before John Quincy Adams had taken the oath as president in 1828, and the long three years' campaign which resulted in Jackson's elevation to the White House was on. Jackson had received a plurality of both the popular and the electoral vote, and probably would have received a majority of both if the people had been permitted to vote for presidential electors. The slogan "Let the people rule" was so potent that of the six states which chose electors by this method only one, all but South Carolina had surrendered that right to the popular suffrage before 1828. Jackson had been the choice of the greater number of the people and the indignation against the manner in which he was prevented from taking the presidency was intense. Out of grew the division of political parties and the system of political methods which obtains to this day.

The campaign of 1828 was the first in which there were two parties openly battling for the votes of the whole people. Both Jackson and Adams claimed to be the true exponents of the Democratic-Republican party of Jefferson, but the latter immediately distinguished the parties were known as "Jackson" and "Adams." It was not until three or four years later that the Adams people adopted the name of "National Republicans," thereby driving the Jackson party to the popular designation "Democrats." The name "Whigs" holds, although the official name "Democratic-Republican" was adhered to until after the Civil war.

Judge Going, Who Advises Woman to Jump Into Lake.

"You should do one or the other of two things—either leave Chicago or else go jump in the lake. This statement from one bar of justice has started the world and provoked a storm of protest from every quarter. Is life over worthless? Can a woman ever sink so deep that there is still no hope? Can a judge pronounce this death sentence? Those who have criticized Judge Going most are the people in closest touch with the class of "women of the street," of which it is claimed this woman is, and they assert that there is the hope, opportunity to reform, and institutions founded for the purpose of assisting just such women. They are very wrong in their criticism of the judge.

The case is one which occurred in the Chicago municipal court, when Judge Going was grinding out his daily grind of local cases. The woman in question appeared with a charge of disorderly conduct. Judge Going, who is a man of the highest character, demanded Judge Going, sharply: "I am," she said, "married. My husband is not married. I have known her for some time. She is a bad woman, and a lesson should be taught her."

Judge Going looked at the woman. There was no sign of compassion upon his face. He watched her for a few minutes and she bowed her head in sorrow and shame. There seemed no question of sympathy between the judge and the woman who stood before him. He accused of a crime, which hundreds of others have settled for at the bar of the country, however, firmly believed that it was true and it always weighed against Mr. Clay's aspirations.

By issue in 1828 urging the people to vote for Adams and denying the charges made by Jackson and his followers. In the pamphlet he proved by the Marquis de Lafayette, by senators, barkeepers and every sort and condition of men that he had always been a friend of the people. He declared that Clay's fear of Jackson was the fear of a military dictator, the fear of an unschooled man at the helm of the ship of state, and the like.

not only a justifiable exit from a world that seemingly has nothing to offer, but is decidedly praiseworthy.

"Strange as it may seem, it is to the woman that suicide offers itself most as a solution to worldly troubles," he declared. "It is seldom that man reaches that state of absolute forgetfulness of the world and his duties to society that suicide is a justifiable solution.

"To every woman who strays from the narrow path there is an opportunity to reform. But there is the type of woman that does not accept opportunities of any kind but for further waywardness. This is the type on which suicide rightfully makes its mark. This is the woman oblivious to all but the call of a vicious life, who hates society and the world, and whose continued life is a menace to the society which she by no means adorns.

"Society is by no means relieved of the responsibility of this woman's condition. Society takes a strange stand in its attitude toward women who lead such lives. These women may become good, but like the ex-convict, they have one great fear, and that is the fear of being found out. And when they are found out society makes them feel the fact in keenest fashion.

"It is for this reason that women in time must reach that state of utter forgetfulness that some provision should be made. It is to them that chance society some life of respectable employment, should be offered before they reach that stage.

"Chicago city officials, I hold, are mainly responsible for the conditions here. Public officials who countenance the extension of the term of imprisonment for the segregation of immoral resorts are responsible for the sin and horror, the pain and misery that exists within those tawdry walls.

"As a remedy, what would you suggest?" Judge Going was asked.

"The abolition of segregated districts of vice," was the reply.

Bertha Lazelle could not raise the necessary fine and was taken to the Bridewell, where she was assigned to laundry work by Superintendent John L. Whitman. Mr. Whitman talked with her in a more gentle strain than did Judge Going. "There is no reason for you to jump into the lake," he said.

"We will help you to reform, and there is no reason why a woman even with a Bridewell record should not go back on the right track and lead a life of usefulness."

"I'll try," sobbed the young woman. "I don't blame the judge for telling me to jump in the lake. I was stunned when he pronounced that sentence. Perhaps because my mode of life had blunted my faculties I needed just such a coarse reprimand."

Two Views of Old Hickory.

Jackson's great popularity as a war hero gave him the plurality of the votes in 1828. Four years later he still the hero, and he had the added strength of the popular belief that he

L. and This

It will be to learn that the leading medical writers and teachers of all the several schools of practice recommend, in the strongest terms possible, each and every ingredient entering into the composition of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery for the cure of weak stomach, dyspepsia, catarrh of stomach, liver complaint, torpid liver, or biliousness, chronic bowels affections, and all catarrhal diseases of whatever region, name or nature. It is also a specific remedy for all such chronic or long standing, chief of catarrhal affections and their resultant, as bronchitis, throat and lung disease (except consumption) accompanied with severe coughs. It is not so good for acute colds and coughs, but for lingering, or chronic cases it is especially efficacious in producing perfect cures. It contains Black Cherry bark, Golden Seal root, Bloodroot, Stone root, Mandrake root and Queen's root—all of which are highly praised as remedies for all the above mentioned affections by such eminent medical writers and teachers as Prof. Bartholow, of Jefferson Med. College; Prof. Hare, of the Univ. of Pa.; Prof. Finley, of Springfield, M. D., of Benning, Med. College, Chicago; Prof. John King, M. D., of Cincinnati; Prof. John M. Scudder, M. D., of Cincinnati; Prof. Edwin M. Hale, M. D., of Hahnemann Med. College, Chicago, and scores of other equally eminent in their several schools of practice.

"The Golden Medical Discovery" is the only medicine put up for sale through druggists for like purposes that has any such endorsement, and it is a fact that the number of ordinary medicinal preparations. Open publicity of its formula is the best possible guaranty of its merit. A glance at this published formula will show that "Golden Medical Discovery" contains no poisonous, harmful or habit-forming drugs, and no alcohol—being a pure, triple-refined glycerine being used instead. Glycerine is entirely unobnoxious and besides is a most useful agent in the cure of all stomach and lung affections. There is the highest medical authority for its use in all such cases. The "Discovery" is a concentrated glyceric extract of native medicinal roots and is safe and reliable. What Adams Had to Face.

On the other side, all the old charges against Adams were revived. He was accused of seeking to perpetrate his family in the office of president; his Unitarian religious beliefs were attacked as being infidelism and his loyalty during the war was questioned.

And all this in spite of the fact that Adams was one of the best and most able men who ever occupied the White House, the most scholarly of our presidents and a true patriot.

These Jackson supporters made the most of the hero business. "Old Hickory" was their ideal and they sang:

"Freemen, cheer the hickory tree,
In storm its boughs have sheltered
O'er freedom's land its branches wave,
'Twas planted on the lion's grave."

The lion, of course, was the British lion, for in those days the king of beasts was always used to represent "perfidious Albion," and his only occupation in the United States was substituting himself to the operation of tail-twisting.

The question of nomination of candidates never entered into this campaign. Both Jackson and Adams were nominated by various state legislatures, but as a matter of fact the two tickets, Jackson and Calhoun, and Adams and Bush, were nominated by common consent.

Tammany Enters Politics.

Jackson and Calhoun in this campaign were the first regular Tammany hall nominations for president and vice-president. Of course the hall had taken great interest in national politics from the beginning of Washington's second administration. In this year its "regular" year. It is interesting to note

Hero Worship at the Limit.

The Jackson newspapers played the team of horses.

Having been organized in the first place as a democratic opposition to the aristocratic Society (Cincinnati), the Tammany braves were naturally on the side of the "low-brows." But they had supported the Virginia aristocratic clique and had followed Crawford when Crawford was ended. Martin Van Buren recognized the possibilities of the political strength of Andrew Jackson and took the up-state Crawford following into the Jackson camp persuading Tammany hall to come along.

If the people had been permitted to vote for electors in New York in 1824, or if the three Clay electors had stuck to their instructions in that year, Tammany hall might have followed Adams and Clay in the big split of the old party and thus have changed the whole future of American politics.

You cannot draw an inference with a The Jackson newspapers played the team of horses.
