ABALONES

Japanese Divers Get Millions of Them on American Pacific Coast. The abalone industry has reached such commercial value on the California coast that it has been necessary to enact a law to protect these boneless mollusks by limiting the size of the shells collected.

The consumption of abalones as food by Americans has been rather tentative, but lately, according to Out West, there has been a decided increase in this article, largely due to the manner of preparing the fish for market.

It is sold in cans, as is used as "highly recommended by physicians for its strengthening and invigorating qualities." The contents of the can are cubes or dice-like bits of abalone, and these with the liquid are made into soup, chowder, fritters, salad, etc.

As an export the fish is dried rather than canned. Before the abalone fishery became such an industry strings of dried abalones were sold in Mexican stores in Los Angeles. They were nearly oblong in shape, from three to four inches long and like leather in appearance, they formed a fine contrast to the long strings of bright red chili peppers that hung beside them. As the river, used as a means of the abalone, was removed only the immense foot (it has but one) and abductor muscles are utilized in drying.

The flat, oval shells are too well known to need describing. Their beautiful play of color makes the finer specimens a subject of admiration to collectors of pearl curios. In the early sixties of the last century, when the industry was developing, it was noted that the shell alone that gave it commercial value.

one man in a month's time. But the value of the abalone fisheries had from 1864 to the latter part of the century developed from an industry in shells to one of considerable importance as a food export.

The fish commission for 1901 reported the Japanese carrying over the abalone fishery in Monterey county, having diving suits, air pumps and latest accessories for collecting the mollusks. The products at this fishery amounted to 108,375 pounds of dried abalone meat, and 65,293 pounds of shells. San Diego also had an exportation of abalones, the dried meat being sent to San Francisco before it was shipped to China.

The shell and animal part of the abalone are of about equal weight when collected, but after the liver and other organs are removed from the meat and it is dried for the market only about 10 pounds of meat is produced from 100 pounds of shells and meat, a shrinkage of about 90 per cent.

Another fishery of some importance on the northern coast of Mendocino county collected as many as 2,300 abalones a day. Here also diving suits, calvanized helmets, etc., are a part of the collecting outfit. The collection of abalones fish by using diving armor is an innovation in the United States in the fishing industry. The water goes down to a depth ranging from 30 to 75 feet of water. He uses a netlike basket, and this is hauled up and emptied by men above.

Then the shells are taken to camp. Big wooden tubs hold the meat, which is washed, and the following day parboiled and placed in the sun for a few hours, smoked for three hours, again boiled and dried, and this process is repeated, the drying time extending over weeks, the boiling probably as many hours. The fish are dried on trays.

Tippling in Bohemia. From the London Chronicle. In the city of Prague a tip to the tramway conductor is considered disgraceful. The orthodox tip consists of but 2 heller, or two tenths of a penny, yet as "strap-hanging" is allowed for in considering the carrying capacity of the car, the conductors should have got a goodly pocketful of the minimum coin by each day's end.

Tippling, it was ascertained in another of Bohemia's larger towns, is so fully recognized that the head waiter at a cafe pays a rent for his post, supplies all the journals for the coffee-room and looks after the other waiters, and then makes an income larger than that of a university professor—all out of his tips.

After supper at one of the delightful open-air cafes of the capital it was found that approximately one should give a half krone (fivepence) to the head waiter who took payment, twopence to the under waiter who brought the viands, and a halfpenny to the boy who brought—and even brought again as one glass was finished—the beer.

FLEXIBLE RUBBER PLATES

Have many advantages over the old thick, cumbersome, ordinary rubber plates, and even over gold plates, being much lighter and thinner. These plates are flexible, only a trifle thicker than heavy writing paper, fit closer and adhere better to the roof of the mouth. Particles of food and small seeds cannot get under them. They will last longer, are stronger than any others, and will not break, as they will give first, being flexible.

I have always heretofore shared with most people the opinion of a dentist's chair. But now am sure I shall not dread the ordeal again, for at your office I can truthfully say, "I was not hurt at all." Even the bridgework which I had dreaded was painless and most satisfactory. Being a stranger in this city and not knowing any dentist, I am certain I found one of the best, Chicago Painless Dentists. Their work is very satisfactory, and should be highly recommended. Mrs. N.
