PASS ON LID TOMORROW

Judge Gantenbein Apparently Breaking Sunday Law to Prepare Decision—Lawyers Exchange Many Words.

Lid or no lid is the question that Presiding Judge Gantenbein will decide in the circuit court tomorrow morning. He was unable to prepare his decision in time to announce yesterday, but authorized the statement that he will be ready to pass on the question when court convenes tomorrow morning. Now some people are wondering whether the judge himself will work on Sunday in order to decide whether or not other people shall be allowed to work on Sunday in the future.

The "lid" case is eltitled "M. A. Gunst & Co., and others, against George J. Cameron and others," and the question to be ruled on is the demurrer to the complaint interposed by District Attorney Cameron. Cameron asserts, in the first place, that the district attorney cannot be enjoined in the enforcement of a criminal statute. Then he lugs in a lot of authorities to prove that cigar men, confectioners, newsstand salesmen, ballplayers and numerous other classes are within the prohibited lines of the Sunday closing statute.

To all of this the attorneys for the retailers say nay. They claim that a decision of the Oregon supreme court settles the question of their right to enjoin Cameron and all the law enforcement officers, and they cited many ponderous volumes to show that the Sunday law is inconsistent, discriminative, deprives them of property rights and is an abomination in the sight of the constitution.

In the meantime the temporary injunction granted by Judge Gantenbein will prevent any interference by the district attorney today. What the situation will be next Sunday depends on the decision to be given tomorrow.

Other decisions to be announced by Judge Gantenbein tomorrow morning are as follows:

Richard Scammon against John W. Cook, motion to strike out parts of complaint.

M. Palley against I. M. Stark, motion to strike out parts of amended complaint.

Peter Johnson against W. E. Watts, demurrer to complaint.

H. M. Fancher against E. E. La Brice and others, demurrer to complaint.

NEWS FORECAST OF COMING WEEK

National Campaign Will Swing to Eastward—Fleet to Japan.

(Special Dispatch to The Journal.)

Washington, D. C., Oct. 10.—During the coming week the theatre of warfare in the national campaign will be shifted a little farther eastward. New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio and contiguous states will ring with the oratory of the foremost campaign speakers of all parties. In addition to the candidates on the two tickets, the Republicans and Democrats will marshal their best talent for the fray. Among those who will be heard nightly in cities of the east and middle west are Vice-President Fairbanks, Senator Beveridge, former Secretary of the Treasury Leslie M. Shaw, Senator Gore, Senator Daniel, Senator Borah and Governor Hughes.

The reception of the American fleet at Yokohama at the end of the week will be an event to attract international attention. The visit of the fleet will be marked by one of the most elaborate demonstrations of its kind ever given in Japan.

Mount St. Mary's college, the second oldest of the Catholic colleges in the United States, will celebrate its centennial Wednesday and Thursday. Cardinal Gibbons, Archbishop Falconio and other eminent prelates will participate in the ceremonies.

Important conventions of the week will include the International Good Roads congress in Paris, the annual convention of the National American Woman Suffrage Association in Buffalo, the Brotherhood of St. Andrew in Milwaukee, the National League of American Sportsmen at Lawton, Okla., the American Meat Packers' association in Chicago, the Association of Military Surgeons in Atlanta, the American Street and Interurban Railway associations at Atlantic City, and the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions in Brooklyn.

DENTISTRY FOR TREES.

Interesting Work Done Nowadays to Preserve Trees From Decay.

What is tree surgery? In so far as it applies to the cement work alone a good answer would be that it is the practical application of dentistry to trees. But this answer would not cover the many other branches of the profession, consisting of trimming, chaining, packing, scraping, spraying and fertilizing. Tree surgery is in fact an advanced development of arborculture. Both fruit and shade trees are valued now as never before, and the fact has become generally known that by skillful methods of the tree surgeon it is possible to give new lease of life to trees which apparently had reached their limit of existence. tI is safe to say that almost any tree of medium age may be saved by these methods.

Of the many branches embraced in this work the cement filling forms by far the largest and most important part. The practice of filling cavities with cement has long been in use, but when carried out along the usual lines it only serves to add to the original trouble. The method of sealing up the decayed section simply increased the decay. Many examples may be seen where the bark at the side of the cavity was covered by the cement, no regard having been paid to drainage or the subsequent healing of the wound. As the cement did not stick to the wood and the swaying of the tree by the wind often enlarged the crack between the wood and the filling water penetrated behind the cement and decay went on even more rapidly than before.

The tree grows in girth by the deposit of a thin layer of new wood between the wood and the bark. There are three layers in this coat—the middle one being composed of thin forming tissues known as the "cambium." The inner side of this layer forms new wood, the outer new bark. It is this new layer and the layers of the four or five previous years which are known as the sapwood, and form the active section of the trunk and branches. The cells of these inner rings are gradually covered by the yearly deposit of new growth, and from living sapwood become heartwood, which is dead and serves merely as a strong framework for the living parts of the tree and as storehouses for excess material.

This is the reason why hollow trees may often be found in a flourishing condition when the heartwood may have entirely disappeared. However, a landscape tree in this condition, deprived of the shelter of its fellows, is in grave danger, for a high wind or a heavy snowfall may find it an easy victim.

After a mass of decay has been removed from the interior of a rotting trunk there remains a shell of living sapwood and bark. Into this cavity a steel brace is inserted and bolted in place. This gives to the tree a stability which by the decay of the supporting heartwood it had lost. Now comes an important operation, the cutting of the watersheds, which prevent the entrance of moisture. The watersheds consist of a deep groove cut about an inch inside the edge and opening to the ground below. The cement being packed tightly into these grooves, forms a channel down which the water flows, to be led out at the base. The cavity is then wired throughout, the wire being stretched from nails driven into the wood, and acting as reenforcing for the cement. This work having been completed, the cement is made as moist as possible, and then built out into the original outline of the tree. The bark which has been cut back for an inch or so in order to prevent bruising while the work is in progress will eventually cover the filled in wound, the tree thus regaining its normal appearance.

In the case of exceptionally large cavities the opening is covered by large strips of zinc. The cement is then forced down into every crevice and allowed to set, after which the zinc is removed and a coat of fine finishing cement put on and painted the color of the bark. By this method the tree surgeon is enabled to build out trees where fully half the wood may have been destroyed by lightning or from some other cause. This treatment serves as a fine example of the healing powers of nature, for it is remarkable how quickly these wounds will heal when protected from moisture and further decay by the cement filling insured by the watersheds.

MARK'S PLAYMATES.

Why They Are Hard to Find in a Town Where People Age Slowly.

Macon, Mo., Oct. 10.—"Lots of Mark Twain's schoolmates are still living at Hannibal," said Robert Blackwood of Hannibal, private secretary to Congressman Lloyd of the First district, "but it is hard for strangers to find them.

"Many of them are much older than Clemens, but over in Hannibal we don't call a man old till he gets beyond 75. The papers and the magazines have been so much in the habit of referring to Mark Twain as 'the aged humorist' that many of our people have gathered the idea that he must be 100 or thereabout. That's why the ambitious young men who go to Hannibal seeking Mark Twain data find it nearly impossible to meet any man who will admit being a schoolmate of the author of 'Tom Sawyer.'

"Clemens will be 73 on November 30. That may be quite ancient according to the strenuous east, but we have any number of men actively engaged in business who are much older.

"You see, Hannibal is almost a mountain town. Climbing up and down the streets gives a man physical vigor and the cool, pure breezes always blowing from the river fill his lungs with the sort of oxygen that kills disease germs. Being way up, where the air's so pure you sleep sound, and nobody catches wrinkles till they're getting along toward the 80's.

"If Clemens had remained there he'd be in the juvenile class yet, and nobody would have thought of calling him one of the ancients."

It may be added that Judge Thomas H. Bacon, who died at Hannibal last week, was referred to in dispatches announcing his demise as "the playmate of Mark Twain." Judge Bacon always resented being so classified, not because of any dislike to Clemens but because he regarded the humorist as too much his senior to be called his playmate.

Judge Bacon was 69, making a difference of four years between his age and Clemens'. A few years ago the writer called upon him to get some boyhood stories about his playmate.

"You are another of those fellows pestering me about Mark Twain," said the judge testily. "Will you never learn that Sam was a great deal older than me? There are lots of people here about his age. Hunt up George Moore, the United States clerk—he's about the right age."

Mr. Moore had sent the interviewer to Judge Bacon with pretty much the same sort of speech.
