ABRUZZI-ELKINS MATCH IS OFF

Announcement From Inner Circles at Rome, Washington Confirms.

(United Press Leased Wire.)

Rome, Oct. 13.—The engagement of the Duke of Abruzzi and Miss Katherine Elkins has undoubtedly been broken. This announcement comes today from inner court circles and it bears the semi-official stamp. It is credited as the truth by many of the duke's friends. The break is said to have resulted from the constant discussion of the match in Europe and America, both in the public prints and in general gossip.

The news came as a surprise to most people here, as it was reported only recently that all the details had been completed, even to the sending of a squadron of warships to America to escort the royal bridegroom back to his native country with his bride.

It was announced today that the Duke of Abruzzi wired from Turin to the royal family on Saturday saying that his engagement to marry Miss Elkins had been broken. The dowager queen, who bitterly opposed the match from the first, wired the duke in reply:

"By listening to the voice of dignity, rather than that of affection, you give proof of possessing greater character than you displayed in your famous expeditions. I congratulate you with renewed affection."

The duke makes no attempt to conceal his sadness.

A rumor, which apparently is authentic, says Miss Elkins broke off the engagement, following continual uncomplimentary references to her by the press and royalty of Italy.

Washington, Oct. 13.—The announcement from Rome that the Abruzzi-Elkins engagement has been broken is credited here and is strengthened by recent denials from Senator Stephen B. Elkins of West Virginia that the engagement ever existed.

DEFENSE HAS CHANCE

of the star witnesses for the defense, said that he lives at Goble and has been logging in the vicinity of Portland for three or four years. He was in Portland April 30 and May 1. On the night of the thirtieth he saw a man closely resembling Martin about 10 o'clock at the bar in Erickson's saloon. The man seemed in a dazed condition, with his eyes half closed, and had scratches on his face, as though he had been in a fight with a wildcat. The wounds looked to be fresh, as though they had just quit bleeding. This was about 10 o'clock. The man said his name was Martin and invited the witness to drink with him. He also noticed that the man's mouth twitched in a peculiar way. The man wore a long dark overcoat, but he did not notice the hat or other clothing or notice whether or not his hands were scratched.

Martin Orders Drinks.

Waldy said he and Martin talked about 20 minutes and had three drinks. Martin ordered two of them and the witness ordered one. Martin did not pay for his drinks. He appeared to be acquainted with the bartender, the witness said, and after Martin had ordered twice the barkeep made a sign with his eyes that the witness thought meant that Martin could not order any more.

Deputy District Attorney Fitzgerald at once started a long cross-examination by testing the memory of the witness as to other things that took place about the same time. Waldy said he came to Portland on April 29. He had been working at Holton and had a row with the boss. He did not know the day of the week he quit work. He knew it was the night of April 30 when he saw Martin because the next day was May day. He could not remember the name of any other person he met that night or the next day. He spent most of his time around Erickson's and Larson's saloons. He arrived in Portland before dark and got a room at the Seattle rooming-house at 32½ Third street, where he formerly stopped when he came to Portland. He thought a woman ran the house, but said that Japs are running it now.

Did Not Like Martin.

Recounting his meeting with Martin, the witness said Martin told him that he had taken a liking to him. But he did not like Martin. He said Martin looked to him like a man of the class that lives off the earnings of fallen women, and he wanted to get away from him. Martin wanted the witness to go to San Bernardino, Cal., and go prospecting, and said he had plenty of money, but did not exhibit any.

The witness said he stayed in town three or four days and left on Friday. He remembered that because he went to the Eastern & Western lumber camp, going on the steamer Beaver, and he walked on Saturday to the logging camp. This testimony will be used by the state to discredit the witness, as the calendar shows that May 1 was Friday, and if he left Portland on Friday after being in town three or four days, and talked to Martin the day after he arrived, he did not talk to Martin on the night of April 30.

The witness, under the merciless questioning of Fitzgerald, told of his movements to different logging camps, showing lapse of memory on many points and twisting almost out of his seat. Much provoked, Waldy exclaimed:

"You ask lots of foolish questions. If I had known that I was going to be asked about these little things I might have put down the dates."

Waldy said he first told about what he knew of the case this morning, when he told Attorney Jeffrey. He went to Jeffrey's office last night, but Jeffrey was not there. He came to testify because he thought it was his duty, he said. He read about the murder of Wolff, but did not hear about Martin's scratches until just lately. He did not think about the Martin he met being the same one, because he saw a picture of the prisoner in the papers, and the picture did not look like the same man.

Juror McPherson questioned the witness concerning a remark he had droped as to meeting a policeman soon after he returned to Portland from a trip down the river. Waldy said he came up on the boat with a man who gave the name of Charles Henderly and this man said that he was in Wolff's store at 6 p. m. He thought that information might be of value to the police, so he told a patrolman, whose name he does not know.

Thread in Glove.

H. Bruck, a shoe manufacturer, was the first witness of the morning. With a powerful magnifying glass he examined the gloves found in Martin's suitcase and testified as an expert that three kinds of thread are in the forefingers of each glove. On top and outside, he said, is a red thread, on the underside a purple thread used in the shuttle, and besides these a brown thread, sewn by hand, used in repairing. This was to corroborate the testimony of Mrs. Wolff as to having repaired the forefinger of each glove. A question as to similarity of the thread used in repairing and the unused thread on the spool which Mrs. Wolff said she used was objected to and the objection sustained.

On cross-examination the witness said he never manufactured gloves and never before testified as a glove expert. He denied that he is biased in favor of the state.

Hellyer Recalled.

Detective Hellyer was recalled and said that when Martin was searched at the police station $40 was taken from him, mostly in $5 gold pieces. He turned the money over to Seneca Fouts. The latter, one of the attorneys for the defense, was made a witness for the state on this point and identified a receipt he signed for $41.02.

J. H. Olson, former clerk for Nathan Wolff, was recalled to testify that Wolff kept an ax for splitting wood in the rear room of his store. The bloody ax with the broken handle resembled the one Wolff kept. Juror McPherson asked a lot of questions covering much of the old ground in the case. He wanted to know whether or not a "tall blonde man" was ever seen by the witness talking to Wolff, the juror evidently having in mind the mysterious stranger who first called attention to the hidden gun and bloody overcoat in South Portland.

State Closes.

Here the state brought its case to an abrupt close with the announcement by Deputy District Attorney Fitzgerald, "The state rests."

The other witnesses for the defense before noon were two clothing experts, called to discredit the testimony of the state as to its identification. S. M. McElroy, 13 years a salesman, came first. He said that cravenettes are made in all the big cities of the east and sometimes identical coats as to material, color and style are made by different firms. He could not identify a plain cravenette unless it bore some particular mark.

Common Sizes.

As to gloves, the witness said that Dent's are one of the best known brands of gloves. He also said that the gloves and collars in evidence are of the sizes most commonly sold and worn.

C. C. Bradley of Good, Bradley & Co. was the second witness on this line and testified to much the same effect as McElroy. He said he had never himself sold any coats of the same make as the ones in evidence.

MURDERED MAN'S WIFE AND DAUGHTER GIVE TESTIMONY

With the testimony of Mrs. Nathan Wolff, widow of the murdered pawnbroker, and corroborative testimony by her little daughter as to the gloves declared by them to have belonged to Wolff, but found in the suit case left in the Belvedere hotel by Martin, the case of the state against the alleged slayer of the dead pawnbroker was practically completed yesterday afternoon.

Fitting one circumstance into another, leading from the telltale shirt to the borrowed revolver, the bloody overcoat, the suspicious wounds on the defendant's face, neck and hands, the bloody collar of identical size and brand, the new overcoat identified as the property of Wolff, down to the climax of the gloves so positively sworn to by the widow and her child, Deputy District Attorney Fitzgerald declared himself well satisfied with the case he has presented and confident that the defense will be unable to tell a story that will leave the jury with a reasonable doubt as to the guilt of Martin.

Mrs. Wolff presented a pathetic figure as she was led to the witness-stand. Attired in mourning, her face tells the story of suffering she has undergone in the last few months. It was feared that the ordeal would be too much for her, recalling as it must so vividly the horror of that night when she learned of the fate that had overtaken her husband. One of her friends led her slowly to the witness-chair, and stood beside her to give her quick assistance in case of need.

Only once did Mrs. Wolff give way to her emotions. That was when she reached the point in her story of telling when she learned that her husband had been murdered. As she uttered the word, almost inaudibly, she sank back and put her handkerchief to her face for a few moments. She was given a drink of water and a new line of questioning was taken up, relieving her mind for the moment from too vivid recollections.

During the widow's pathetic narrative Martin manifested the keenest interest. He regarded the witness closely, evidntly mentally weighing every statement she made, and shifting his glance now and then to the jurors, as though trying to discern the effect of her accusing statements. He was clearly alive to the fact that the most critical point for him had been reached. Except that he was more solemn than usual, with no smile lighting his peculiar face, there was no change in his demeanor. He still displayed the calm, unchanging exterior that he has worn since the trial began.

Mrs. Wolff said that she has four children, ranging from 6 to 11 years of age. The second child, 9 years old, is a boy, and the others are girls. Deputy District Attorney Fitzgerald went at once to the point of handing the witness the gloves found in Martin's suit case and asking if she could identify them.

Mrs. Wolff said she could not be mistaken. She had mended the tip of the finger of each glove for her husband, and she recognized her stitches. She used silk thread, and she identified the unused portion of the spool. Her eldest daughter assisted in picking out a thread that would most closely match the gloves, she said. When her husband bought the gloves he remarked how good they were and said they would last a lifetime. When he asked her to mend them, not many months after, she remarked to him that they had not lasted a very long lifetime. The witness also pointed out a peculiarity in the buttons on the gloves and said she could not be mistaken as to these gloves being the ones her husband wore. The last time she saw them until after they were brought to her for identification was when her husband left the house on the morning of May 1. He put them on as he went out on the street.

The witness said that when her husband started to go down town that morning he did not have his overcoat. She told him it looked like rain and he had better take it. He then put on his cravenette. It was long for him and dragged on the steps as he went down. The gloves were in the pocket of the coat, where he usually kept them.

The witness identified the cravenette worn by Martin at the time of his arrest as her husband's. He bought it about the middle of February. He was in the habit of removing all tags and maker's names from his clothing. She did not remember as to his removing the tags from the cravenette, but supposed he had done so. The coat in Martin's possession bore no tags, although comparatively new.

The witness was shown the bloody overcoat, alleged by the state to have been worn by Martin since he came to Portland. She said her husband had two top coats, one of them similar to the bloody coat, but she was quite sure he had never worn that coat.

Then Mrs. Wolff related her experience on the night of the murder, when she went to her husband's pawnshop to learn what was the matter, arriving just as Watchman Robinson entered and discovered the store in confusion.

Cross-examination by Attorney Jeffrey was brief. The witness resolutely maintained that she was certain that the gloves belonged to her husband. She could not remember what kind of suit her husband wore the day he was killed. She said he weighed about 150 pounds and was about five feet, 8 inches in height.

Attorney Jeffrey asked the widow, as he has many other witnesses, as to the kind of watch and hat Wolff wore, and as to whether either article was found in the pawnshop after the murder. Mrs. Wolff said her husband wore a dark fedora hat, and his watch was gold, with a monogram on the back and pictures of his wife and children inside the case. Neither she nor any other of the witnesses questioned had seen either hat or watch since the murder.

The witness also testified that she had a set of keys to the pawnshop at the house. There were two other sets, both in Wolff's possession when he was killed. Both sets disappeared and were evidently taken by the murderer.

Aline C. Wolff, 11-year-old daughter of the murdered pawnbroker, timidly told again the story of the mended gloves, which she identified as ones her father had worn. She remembered helping her mother to pick the silk thread, and saw her mother sew them. She also heard her father speak about the gloves "lasting a lifetime" when he brought them home. The cross-examination was directed toward giving the impression that the child was influenced in her testimony by what she had heard her mother and the detectives say.

FINDING OF COAT AND RIFLE IS TOLD BY WITNESSES

J. M. Schlott, who had made a failure as a witness in the forenoon because of his nervousness, was recalled as the first witness of the afternoon. With long pauses between answers to enable him to collect his thoughts the witness narrated the circumstances of finding the bloody overcoat and rifle in South Portland. On the details of the find he contradicted J. M. Fraser and Ben Lynch. He said the coat was lying lose in an old hack, the others saying it was wrapped up. He said he and Fraser went down to the hack together and carried the gun and coat back together, the witness carrying the rifle. Others testified that the gun was taken up first.

Schlott said he has lived in Portland 27 years and was working for Lynch, painting wagons, when his attention was first called to the old hack by a strange man. This man told him there was a rifle in the hack and he went down to see. The strange man was of sandy complexion and about six feet tall. Answering a question from the defense on cross-examination, the witness said he is not acquainted with Detective Tichenor.

From John H. Beaver, bartender in the Turn Halle cafe, came the first bit of evidence distinctly favorable to the defense. He said he was acquainted with Martin, knew him well because they talked "army" together, his captain and Martin's captain having been classmates at West Point. He had several times seen Martin wear a long cravenette. This was brought out on cross-examination, an objection from the state preventing his going into details. He will be called later by the defense to show that Martin wore a long black coat similar to the one he wore when arrested long before the time of his arrest.

Yesterday Beaver was called for the purpose of showing that Martin was in the Turn Halle on the morning of his arrest and left the place when a newspaper extra arrived, stating that he was wanted. He left without saying a word.

Sergeant John Goltz was again called to narrate the circumstances of the arrest of Martin by Hellyer and himself. He gave a version of the overcoat incident a little more favorable to the defendant than Hellyer's, the latter saying that Martin wanted to leave his coat and umbrella in the room where he was arrested at Union avenue and Morrison street. Goltz said Martin picked up the coat and umbrella and asked, "What will you do with these, leave them here?" He said Hellyer acquiesced in Martin's suggestion. Martin was excited and perspiring and drew his mouth out of shape when he answered questions.

Police Captain C. E. Baty was recalled and testified that he did not receive a telephone message from Martin the day of the arrest. No cross-examination.

DEFENSE TRIES TO MAKE THEORY OF ROBBERY STRONGER

George A. Luke, dealer in gloves and similar goods, was called as an expert by the state and testified that in his judgment the forefingers of each glove hand had been sewed by hand, as though the finger tips had been ripped and mended. This was to corroborate the testimony of Mrs. Wolff as to mending the finger tips. Juror McPherson, who has taken up the cross-examination of over half the witnesses on his own account, asked many questions more or less pertinent. Then the witness and Attorney Jeffrey engaged in a "tilt over the manner in which Luke examined the gloves. The attorney and witness accused each other of "bluffing," without apparently adding to or detracting seriously from the examination in chief.

C. H. Skews, a funeral director, who assisted in caring for the remains of Wolff on the night of the murder, proved to be an unimportant witness, as others had taken charge of the body before he arrived. Sheriff Stevens was called on the same line, he having been an early arrival at the morgue. The sheriff said there was nothing in Wolff's pockets and at least one trouser's pocket was turned inside out. The watch chain was hanging down, without a watch. He did not see the body at the pawnshop.

J. F. Rinehart, the last witness of the day, is the husband of a sister of Mrs. Wolff and has since been in charge of the pawnshop. He had Wolff's books with him and gave the first testimony as to what is missing from the pawnshop, aside from the stolen gun, pawned by J. E. Ewing. The defense was much interested in this phase of the case and asked many questions designed to strengthen the theory that a large "haul" was made by robbers, the defense arguing that at least two men killed Wolff and robbed the shop.

Rinehart said that as nearly as can be determined, Wolff had about $60 in his pockets when he was murdered. This was shown by entries in the books. The regular stock of diamonds carried in the store had been put in the safe on the north side and was not disturbed. The pawned goods were scattered about, and several claims have since been made by persons who say that Wolff had their watches or diamonds in pledge. The money from the till had been put in the vault and it checked up without discrepancy.

Answering questions by the defense, the witness said he knew that claims have been presented by two persons who assert that their diamonds are missing, the valuation in each case being $200. One claimant is a Mrs. Thompson. He was asked if Attorney John H. Hall had not presented a claim for a $200 stone for a client of his, but the witness said he did not know Hall, and could not answer. Rinehart said that probably half a dozen persons have declared their watches are missing. Diamond earrings and rings are also said to be missing. The only gun reported gone is that of Ewing's, which was found cached with the bloody overcoat in South Portland. The witness could not attempt an estimate of the total value of the missing property.

DAVIDOR CAUSES WHITSON'S ARREST

Charged by S. V. Davidor with obtaining money under false pretenses, G. W. Whitson was arrested late last night and locked in the county jail until $1,000 bail could be furnished.

Whitson says that he sold his savings which were in the Oregon Trust & Savings bank to Davidor, who is well known through a series of enterprises which attracted the attention of the authorities last winter. Whitson is ex-manager of the Columbia Fuel & Iron company.

Davidor claims that his chances for collecting the bank account are very slim and when he secured a piano from Whitson as security for a loan of $50 he refused to return it. Whitson says that he will swear out a warrant for Davidor's arrest.

I CURE MEN

My Fee in All Uncomplicated Cases

DR. TAYLOR, The Leading Specialist.

I Treat Men Only

The vast multitude of men who have taken my treatment have not been disappointed. They know that I do not promise more than I perform. To them I have actually illustrated in the cure of their own cases the truth of what I claim, namely, that my treatment is as certain to cure as it is that my patient engages my services and follows my directions. My success is due not alone to education, experience, skill and scientific equipment, but to the fact that I limit my study and practice strictly to diseases and weaknesses of men. To male maladies alone I have earnestly and exclusively devoted 25 years of my life, and on them all my faculties are concentrated.

I Cure Cases That Other Doctors Fail to Cure

Even though your case may be one that some other doctor is able to cure, and though his cure be absolutely thorough and permanent, there is yet good cause for your coming to me for treatment. The service I tender is entirely unlike and better than the ordinary. I have devised new and scientific methods of treating men's diseases in all their phases. I cure cases that others cannot cure, and cases that others can cure I cure in less time and without pain or possibility of injury. All my forms of treatment have been perfected along the lines of nature's requirements and are in exact harmony with the natural recuperative force. Therefore, my cures are painless, prompt and thorough.

Contracted Disorders

The serious results that may follow neglect of contracted diseases could scarcely be exaggerated. Safety demands an absolutely thorough cure in the least possible time. I have treated more cases of contracted disorders than any other physician upon the Pacific coast. My cures are thorough and are accomplished in less time than other forms of treatment require in producing even doubtful results. I employ remedies of my own devising, and my treatment is equally effective in both recent and chronic cases.

Pay When Cured

Varicocele

There is no necessity for surgical operations in the treatment of Varicocele. This disease yields completely to my mild and painless method, and results are far better than were ever attained by the harsh and dangerous practice of cutting. But one week is required, and seldom is it even necessary to detain the patient from his business.

Stricture

In the treatment of stricture I have again triumphed over surgery. I employ an original method by which the obstructing tissue is completely dissolved, and all inflammation and irritation throughout the system expelled. No pain, no cutting, no dilating, and a sure cure in every instance.

Examination Free

I do not charge for advice, examination or diagnosis. If you call for a private talk with me, you will not be urged to begin treatment. If impossible to call, write. Hours, 9 a. m. to 9 p. m.; Sundays, 10 to 1.

DR. OSLER SAYS

"No doctor can cure all diseases. That's all 'moonshine.' They are 'pretenders.'

"If you can't cure a man, tell him so.

"Physicians use too many drugs.

"I believe that the best doctor is the one who knows the worthlessness of medicines."

The best doctors are breaking away from the old "pill and poison" methods. They have learned that the only way to cure disease is to help nature cure it. Nature wants strength, nourishment, something that builds vitality. You can't get that from drugs.

Electricity is nature's medicine. It is the force that creates vitality. It is the motive power of your body—every organ gets its life from this force.

Most all the ailments of man can be traced to the failure or breaking down of the nerves, stomach, liver, kidneys, heart and digestive apparatus.

The reason any organ fails to do its work properly is because it lacks motive power, electricity. Restore that force where it is needed and pain and disease will disappear. I do this with Electro-Vigor.

Electro-Vigor is a generator of a powerful but soothing current of electricity, worn about your body while you sleep. It sends a steady, unbroken stream of electric life tingling through your nerves and vitals for hours at a time.

Its touch is gentle, without sting or burn. There is no shock; all you feel is a glowing warmth.

Electro-Vigor will drive out your pains and aches, renew your strength and ambition and restore your health by giving every organ, every weak or diseased part of your body, the power to do its work as nature intended.

I can assure you that the results of my use of Electro-Vigor are entirely satisfactory.

Electro-Vigor is all you claim for it and you may refer to me should any prospective patient wish to know about my experience.

WEATHER REPORT

The disturbance yesterday over Alberta has united with another low pressure area and the combined storms are central this morning north of Montana. Storm southwest warnings were ordered last night at 6:30 p. m. at all seaports in this district. A maximum wind velocity of 64 miles southeast occurred last night at North Head, and the storm has caused light but general rain throughout Oregon, Washington and Idaho, except in the extreme southern portions of Oregon and Idaho, where threatening weather has prevailed without rain. The eastern high pressure area is now central over Pennsylvania and a new but weak high pressure area overlies northern California and Nevada.

The indications are for rain in this district tonight, probably followed by clearing weather Wednesday east of the Cascade mountains. It will be cooler tonight except in southeastern Idaho and along the coast.
