Women's Clubs and Their Work

Edited by Mrs. Sarah A. Evans

WHAT can we do to make practical living more interesting to the home-maker? was the subject assigned to Mrs. Robert J. Austen, at the conference on home economics, at the Boston convention. She said: "This question, translated into common parlance, I take it to mean: How can we glorify drudgery? Drudgery, no need, for there is no drudgery in this world if we meet the duties of life with a spirit that is willing and hopeful. Practical living, I infer, refers to the little things and the great things that must be done from day to day for the preservation and comfort of home, and the thousand and one things that are not appreciated in the doing, but that are fatal to the home life, if they are omitted. Not until we are in the home-making, and fundamentally interesting, can we hope to make the methods of home-making artistically and interesting. Occasionally interested in methods and care little for results, if so be the incidental advantages are gained. Home-making is not experimental, to be carried on first in one field and then in every day, but for every day's success."

making that those you wish to have assist you cannot do, and then say I know how to do it, I can do it, I am independent, and you will have eliminated worry, you will have filled your heart with song, your voice with cheer, and you will radiate sunshine in your home. (Glorify means to idealize the work of common living and eliminate drudgery. Never accept home making as a fate to which you have been doomed, but remember it is a high privilege to which you have been called. Never consider the practical things as onerous. They may be burdensome, but they are worth their weight in gold in the educational value to you and your life work. In order to glorify these conditions be not only interested in the quality of your groceries, but be interested in the welfare of your grocer—not only that your meat is clean, but in the manliness of your butcher, and in the perfection of your laundry, but in the well being of your laundress. Think not of the things to be done, but more of the doers of them. "In conclusion, simplify your lives, your home, classify your work of life; give your work and the lives of those about you; glorify all, and the magnetic needle of the home maker's compass will point to the greatest opportunity, the making of a home."

a complimentary luncheon at Hotel Ankers, and a reception followed. WOODBURN Woman's club sends the following very interesting report of its year's work: "In submitting to you my report of the Women's club of Woodburn, it is a pleasure to state that we are progressing. After a study through England last year which was much enjoyed, we are taking up 'Our Country' of the Bay View Magazine course. Our first meeting this month was on the Indians; it was very instructive and entertaining. Mrs. George L. Boynton will entertain the club at the home of Mrs. William F. Amos next Tuesday, 2 p. m., at 553 Hawthorne avenue, corner Twenty-seventh. CIVIC improvement has been made one of the issues with the '95 Mental Culture club of Roseburg the past year with many material results to show for the work. Through the influence property owners around the depot have been induced to paint and improve their property. The club also induced the railroad company to give it a piece of ground near the depot to be beautified, and the contract has now been given for covering it with rich garden soil at a cost of $25. In conjunction with the W. C. T. U. the club erected a fountain at a cost of $50. Added to its civic work the club has kept its study work up to the highest standard. MRS. LUCK AMES MEAD in a letter to the fact that, of the 12 women who were asked to speak at the great peace congress in New York, every one happened to be a woman suffragist, and she adds: "It is safe to say that four fifths of the women who are doing noble service for the community are woman suffragists, and four fifths of the women whose names appear in the society columns in what contests, competing for athletic prizes, and posing for beauty shows are anti-suffragists." Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, in commenting on Mrs. Mead's statement, said her own experience among clubwomen had led her to the same conclusion. THOUSANDS of men in Hungary the other day marched in procession to show their wish for manhood suffrage. The same week, thousands of women in Scotland marched through the streets of Edinburgh to show their wish for a vote. An English paper says: "Edinburgh, the ancient capital of Scotland, has taken her share in pageant and procession, royal, democratic, or revolutionary, but probably her green hills, gray dreary palaces, stately streets, and great battlements and towers never looked down upon a more stirring and more earnest demonstration than that which was held in the city on the 21st of October. The rally point of the procession was the king's park, under the shadow of Arthur's kitchie, by St. Margaret's Loch; and here in the delicate, soft sunshine of an autumn afternoon were gathered hundreds of women in carriages and on foot. Not from Edinburgh alone, but from Glasgow, Aberdeen, Dundee and Dunfermline they came. The procession numbered between 2,000 and 3,000 women. It was as plainly in earnest as any of the great popular heroic demonstrations of history. There was absolutely nothing in this quiet, orderly regiment of earnest women—workers in every department of life, householders, breadwinners, young and old, all united in a common loyalty to their cause—to suggest the virago of popular imagination. A number of men, including one well-known clergyman, marched with the women to show their sympathy. And it is estimated that a crowd of 1,000,000 spectators looked on. The demonstration was held in the city of Edinburgh in Synod hall and an overflow meeting presided over by Miss S. E. S. Blair and Lady Steel. BORN in New York in 1819, Mrs. Julia Ward Howe is now one of the last of her generation, but not of her day, for this is her day just as much as it was in 1861 when she wrote the "Battle Hymn of the Republic." She was one of the speakers at the Boston biennial, where she was introduced by Mrs. Decker as "Mrs. Howe, not of the east, west, north or south, or of the United States, but Mrs. Howe of the Universe." Calm and serene the sunset of her life is passing in Boston where she is still active in all things pertaining to righteousness and truth. She championed the cause of freedom with the might of her living power. To the solemn needs of the hour. She hath worn no chevrons of tinseled, Nor silken banners waved, And the tears of her grateful sisters Were all the jewels she craved. —Club Notes.

might at least study them, as an appreciation of the work of their own organization, to gain the knowledge necessary for an intelligent vote. Numbers give felicitous values unless every club understands the questions under consideration if not individually working along those lines. Let us make our organization so thoroughly understood that the question need never be raised as to what we do, or if raised, easily answered by every one in membership. THE Tuesday Afternoon club met with Mrs. G. Anthony Bateson, 288 1/2 Margin street. A continuation of the study of the works of Jane Austen, was the subject of the afternoon. Roll call was responded to by selections from her writings and biographical sketches. Mrs. Amos gave a very interesting paper—a study on "Emma." Mrs. Stiles gave the "Influence of Miss Austen's work." "The Peculiarities of English Life Portrayed by Miss Austen," was given by Mrs. Bailey. Mrs. Bailey read comments on the life and works of Miss Austen. A paper on "The Influence of Miss Austen's work on the life and works of Miss Austen," was given by Mrs. George L. Boynton. which Miss Ellen Dring, accompanied by Miss Lillian Spencer, sang charmingly. Miss Irma Austen rendered several pleasing instrumental numbers. There were several victors present, among whom were Mrs. McCool and Mrs. Norton and Mrs. Fuller. THE time approaches for the annual convention of the State Federation, which is to be held at La Grande, November 10-12, enthusiasm grows all over the state and each day now is bringing in the names of delegates and alternates who expect to go. From Roseburg, Eugene, Marshfield and southern Oregon, La Grande is a long trip and we might as well admit it, it is an expensive trip. Clubwomen as a rule are not women of large means and the going on such a long trip means a sacrifice, but what was ever gained without a sacrifice? And the board of health made in a good cause ever a secret, not return a hundredfold? And so it will be at our state convention. The officers held in Washington, D. C., for the prevention of tuberculosis, brought the program as arranged is one of the finest that has ever been presented to the clubwomen of the state. Two will be present to talk on the day—the most vital questions of the day—tuberculosis and the prevention of tuberculosis. These lectures will be illustrated with views, many of which Dr. Pierce, who has just returned from the International Congress held in Washington, D. C., for the prevention of tuberculosis, brought home with him. Dr. Smith of Pendleton, who will talk on "Public Health," will have some illustrations on local conditions. Miss May Montgomery of Portland will give a talk on "Industrial Conditions," and Rev. Jeannette Ferris of Michigan will be on the program several times. Many Oregon women will have something of interest to say at different times during the convention. The music will be unusually good, as it will be in charge of the Lytle Musical club, an organization whose home is at La Grande, but is well known and favorably known all over eastern Oregon. The social features arranged by the two entertaining clubs—the Neighborhood and the Lytle Musical—are elaborate and clubwomen will be entertained in a royal manner. As reports come in no feature seems to be lacking to make the convention a grand success. The program and railroad rates will be announced next week.
