WANTED TO TRADE HIS WIFE FOR THE COOK

W. R. Blain, having taken a fancy to the cook, thought it would be a good idea if he could temporarily trade his wife to the cook's sweetheart in return for the smiles of the cook. This, at least, is the story told by Mrs. Carrie Blain, who was one of the applicants for divorce in Judge Gantenbein's department of the state circuit court this morning.

She said her husband suggested the trade while they were conducting a restaurant at Albany, Or. The cook was Florence Kamp and her lover was Charley Dow. Mrs. Blain did not fall in line with the plan, however, and would not "swap" her husband for Charley.

Mrs. Blain said that her husband was jealous of her at times, and often intimated that she was too fond of her brother-in-law. Then he talked about her, she said, and finally went away. He is now in San Leandro, Cal., with their only child, a boy. She was granted a divorce.

The divorce court today was conducted exclusively for the benefit of women who had been fooled by Cupid's promises. Not one representative of the sterner sex came to ask for freedom, or even to dispute the stories of ruel and heartless treatment to by seven wives.

Judge Gantenbein acted as interpreter in one case where the plaintiff had a limited command of English. The questions were asked by the attorney in German, and the answers of the witness in that tongue were translated into English by the court. By this means the expense of an interpreter was saved, and it was learned that Barbara Paulker was married to John Paulker in Austria in 1882. Mrs. Paulker is well advanced in years and told a pathetic story of abuse by her husband. She said he drank a great deal, and several times broke the furniture and the dishes.

Last May, she said, he came home drunk, and when she brought his slippers to him so that he might rest easily he threw a chair at her and chanced her out of the house. When she tried to enter another door he threw another chair, and flourished a revolver. Their 10-year-old son took the revolver away from his father. The decree was granted a settlement of property rights having been made.

Mrs. Belle Hooker testified that her husband, James Hooker, lived with her only three weeks. They were married in Lake Preston, S. D., in December, 1906.

This record for a short marriage was broken by Louise M. Wilkins, who testified that Welby M. Wilkins lived with her only one day. They were married August 2, 1907, and have one child, whose custody was awarded to the mother.

Mrs. Emma Patterson said that she and Herbert W. Patterson had a quarrel because he stayed out nights. He told her if she did not like it he would leave, and he did. This was in October, 1906. They were married in Seattle in 1904.

Mrs. Ida Cook testified that her husband deserted her two years ago at Anstria in 1882. Mrs. Patterson is well advanced in years and told a pathetic story of abuse by her husband. She said he drank a great deal, and several times broke the furniture and the dishes.

BUNGLING BURGLAR CAUGHT IN ACT OF BREAKING INTO SALOON

If E. J. Martin goes to the penitentiary, as it is expected he will, he may there be taught by older men some of the rudiments of the burglar's trade. It is believed by the detectives that he has taken only a correspondence school course in the art. At any rate he ran into the arms of a policeman who didn't know he was a burglar, and to this misfortune owes his present plight.

At 2 o'clock this morning Patrolman Wade heard a noise in the saloon of Herman Bretter, at Mississippi avenue and Russell street. He was not sure whether it was a burglar at work or a porter scrubbing out the place. To make sure he kicked violently on the door. "What are you making so much noise for?" he demanded. There was a scurry of feet across the floor, and Wade, feeling sure that a burglar was inside, ran to a window around the corner.

Just as a man's head showed itself at the window and the owner of the head prepared to climb out to freedom, Wade flashed his electric lantern full in Martin's face. The burglar had a small saw in his pocket with which he had been trying to make a hole through a door and thus reach the desirable portion of the saloon.

Detectives are today trying to connect Martin, a stocky, blonde German aged 27 years, with the robbery of two or three other saloons, recently,

WILLIAM A. PINKERTON, MAN OF MYSTERY, VISITING PORTLAND

William A. Pinkerton—you know who he is—is in Portland today and is about the busiest person in town. But Mr. Pinkerton is always busy. Mr. Pinkerton is making his annual visit to the branch offices on the Pacific coast of the detective agency of which he is the head.

This morning Mr. Pinkerton was at his office, dictating letters most of the time and talking over affairs in general. Along about 11 o'clock he hurried over to the office of J. P. O'Brien—perhaps he had heard of him before, too—and they talked some time.

Wonder what that conference was about? When the general manager of a big railroad company and the best known detective in the country get together there is usually something doing.

When the noon whistles sounded Mr. Pinkerton looked at his watch. The other date on hand. This engagement was with Dustin Farnum, who—but of course you know Mr. Farnum, too, or at least you have read or heard of him. The two had luncheon together. This afternoon Mr. Pinkerton is still busy, but it is not known just what he is doing. You see, Mr. Pinkerton is a pretty mysterious fellow.

But the meeting might have been only a personal visit. The two have long been friends. Anyway, the conference is worth a mention. Very likely if there was anything doing both of the big men would have refused to give it out. So there you are.

They visited all the principal countries of Europe, and have been traveling much of the time since leaving here. At the station tonight there will be Otto Metchan and a lot of other Metchans, including the two Metchan girls from Salem, and there will be a little family reunion.

Where Forests Die Hard. From the Boston Transcript. That is the one astounding thing in this whole region of northern Maine. The regenerative power of the forest. Men will axes have been hacking at the stems of the wood up here for two centuries and more. The gullies have been laid low, indeed, yet for the trees that stood on a given space along the hillsides and in the valleys of the mountains a century ago five stand today. They are giants no more, but they are splendid trees, and the Gulliver was bound, so far as he knew, his own against man and with his own hands and eyes he saw the forest in its glory. The forest was not dead, it was only sleeping. The forest was not dead, it was only sleeping. The forest was not dead, it was only sleeping.
