

KETCHEL AND PAPKE IN THE RING

Fine Weather Gives Promise of Plenty of Fun at Mission Arena, San Francisco—Papke Favorite in Betting—Early Crowd.

(United Press Leased Wire.)
 San Francisco, Nov. 26.—With his usual good luck, promoter James Corfroy was given the finest sort of weather for the 20 round middleweight championship battle between Billy Papke and Stanley Ketchel at Mission Street arena this afternoon. A bright, warm sun chased away the rain clouds and light winds that prevailed Friday, and everything else being propitious the fight fans started the journey to the arena before noon. The gates were opened at 12 o'clock, and the crowd immediately began to pour in.

Morning interest in the battle was centered in the weighing of the boxers. Promptly at 11:30 o'clock, the hour set, the Ketchel and Papke parties appeared at the appointed place. Ketchel, looking fit and ready to put up the fight of his life, and wearing a smile that betokened supreme confidence, was the first to step onto the scales. He was attired in a heavy undershirt, but failed to budge the beam at the 165 pound mark.

Papke followed a few seconds later. He wore a heavy union suit and also failed to bring up the bar. Both men were apparently of the same weight, about 167½. As Papke stepped off the scales Ketchel approached him with extended hand, which the thunderbolt promptly grasped and both wished each other good luck. Ketchel then retired to a dressing room and was served with two cups of hot broth.

Betting at the ringside found Papke and strong favorite at odds that continually fluctuated between 10 to 6½ and 10 to 7. Two or three bets were recorded at 10 to 8. The supply of Papke money seemed inexhaustible.

Every time a large wager was made on Ketchel another chunk of coin was sent in on "the thunderbolt." Betting in the arena was unusually lively.

Just before the preliminary between Antonio Lagrove and Joe Larkin started some betting commissioners were about the ringside offering even money that Ketchel would not last 10 rounds. To offset this, however, the big Reno sportsman and millionaire displayed a roll of bills big enough to choke an elephant, which he was willing to bet on Ketchel, at odds of 10 to 1.

The preliminary was stopped in the second round, the referee, Fly Kreling, declaring Larkin the winner. Larkin had absolutely no chance.

SANTA ANITA TRACK IS OPEN

By R. W. Madison.
 Los Angeles, Nov. 26.—The 120 day race meeting at Santa Anita race track opened today with one of the largest crowds in attendance that ever assembled to witness the opening races at a local park.

A representative gathering was on hand to see the initial races. The business man rubbed elbows with the tout, and the plunger met the piker upon terms of intimacy in the betting ring. Caste was tossed aside and the only result to be attained seemed to be to pick a winner and take the bookmaker's money.

As the barrier shot up releasing the field in the first race the huge crowd arose to its feet and shrieked "They're off!" The cry carried to the mountains and echoed back again. When the field swept into the stretch the spectators were in a frenzy and the rider on the winner was cheered in a manner that will never be forgotten.

About 15 books cut in but this number will probably be increased before very long. George Rose is perhaps the biggest bookie in the city. "Conductor" McManus, Jack Atkin, Sam Shean and a number of others are on hand to lay odds. As a concession for closing his celebrations in his honor during his stay here, because of the death of his uncle, Emperor Kwang Hsu, and of the

PENNSYLVANIA BEATS CORNELL

(United Press Leased Wire.)
 Philadelphia, Nov. 26.—Final score: Pennsylvania 17, Cornell 4. The beginning of the second half found both teams with their lineups unchanged.

Hollenbeck kicked off, attacking the west goal. Mowse ran the ball back 20 yards, bringing Cornell to the center of the field. Manier behind great interference took the ball to Penna's 45 yard line. Here Friedman supplanted Hutchison, Cornell's left tackle. Hutchison of Cornell punted and the ball was booted out of bounds at Pennsylvania's 45 yard line.

Sherrer took Mowse's place at right half. Tiedman was next given the ball for a line buck and he made 12 yards.

In a scrimmage Manier was hurt and forced to retire. Walder here punted to Miller, who made a spectacular run of 88 yards, marking off tackle Friedman, who never stopping until he had placed the ball on Cornell's five yard line.

Pennsylvania was penalized five yards for holding, the ball then was taken to Cornell's 45 yard line, and Hollenbeck crashed into the opposing line for a five yard gain.

BURGLARS CHLOROFORM DOG BUT ARE FOILED BY ITS MISTRESS

(Special Dispatch to The Journal.)
 Spokane, Nov. 26.—After chloroforming a 2-year-old bloodhound by spraying the stupefying drug through the keyhole in the back door of the residence of Albert Leslie, burglars endeavored to force an entrance to the place late last night.

The dog was thrown into a deep stupor and its limbs were practically paralyzed for some little time from the effects of the drug, but the obstacle was surmounted not a skeleton key in the night marauders' collection could turn the lock of Leslie's door.

Mrs. Leslie heard the burglars working on the porch, raised the window and frightened them away. When her husband returned he found the dog in the stupor.

MAN HUNTERS BACK TO ALBANY SHELL MOUND NEAR STANFORD

Suspect at Canby Not Man Wanted. So Officers Retrace Steps.
 Science Enriched From Ancient Store Near the Big University.

(United Press Leased Wire.)
 Palo Alto, Cal., Nov. 26.—Stanford university is experiencing a thrill of mild excitement today through the discovery that Professors Snyder and Holt, both members of the geological department, have been for the last six months secretly digging into an old shell mound behind the university campus. The news leaked out despite the efforts of the archaeologists to keep their work to themselves, and today the learned excavators were notified of their discovery by the center of a large crowd of holiday curiosity seekers. The shell mound, which has been exploited monthly for the last half year, is a veritable treasure house of wonders. The scientists have found skeletons of animals, quantities of shell ornaments, utensils and weapons, and quantities of flint objects, the nature of many of which cannot at this time be decided. All the evidences point to the construction of this odd heap of earth and shells by a tribe who inhabited this region centuries ago, when what is now the hill section was close to the shore of the bay.

Not the least interesting point to be determined by a study of this mound is the geological upheaval at this point which must have elevated the hill of shells to its present site several miles from the water.

This is the first shell mound found near Stanford, and its discovery is in itself an interesting story. The former on whose place the mound is situated had noticed for several years that when he plowed near this point he turned up quantities of shells.

The fact did not disturb him until one day he turned up bones, which he hastily decided were of human origin. Thinking he might be on the verge of discovering evidences of a ghastly crime he communicated his discovery to the town constable, who on making an official investigation detected that the task belonged neither to a policeman nor a coroner but to a competent anthropologist.

(United Press Leased Wire.)
 Tulsa, Okla., Nov. 26.—With small arms, smuggled to them in clematises, 10 prisoners have saved their way to freedom and escaped without being discovered by their guards. As soon as news of the jailbreak was learned a sheriff's posse was sent out in pursuit and deputy sheriffs commenced a systematic search of the houses in the immediate neighborhood of the prison. It is believed that the prisoners framed their plot with the aid of friends on the outside and a special search is being made for these persons.
