FOR WELFARE OF THE MAN WHO TOILS

Uplift Work Is Nowhere More Effective Than in or About the Factory—Nation, State, City and Corporation Enlisted.

By FREDERIC J. HASKIN.

(Copyright, 1908, by Frederic J. Haskin.)

New York, Nov. 26.—The widespread interest of the employer in the health and happiness of his employes, and his eagerness to do all he can to promote these conditions, are some of the biggest proofs of the great uplift that the social and industrial world has known in the past 10 years. This applied interest has become known as "welfare work," a name coined for this use by the National Civic Federation. The German word "wohifahrtseinrichtungen" or welfare institution, as applied to the work abroad, is the nearest approach to this American word.

What is welfare work? The answer is concisely stated by the welfare department of the National Civic Federation—the logical head of this country—wide movement and the clearing house for the perplexities that beset its path: "It is the improving of the working and living conditions of the employe by the employer, and is applicable to stores, factories, mines and railroads as well as public institutions."

Pointing out that the first essentials in the welfare of employes are steady work, and equitable wage, and reasonable hours at labor, this organization then suggests that the work should be directed first toward meeting the pressing necessities of the physical well-being of employes in their work places. Knowing this, manufacturers have wrought great improvements in the matter of drinking water, proper ventilation, light, and protecting machinery.

Recreation and Home Comfort.

Knowing that health and happiness and great joy in work are best promoted by proper recreation, the up-to-date employer provides social halls that can be devoted to dancing parties, concerts, theatricals, billiards, pool or bowling; a gymnasium where under competent instructors, the body may be trained to resist any deleterious effects of work, athletic fields and roof gardens. He arranges for vacations, often spent in country homes of his own providing.

Realizing that ignorance and untrained hands, both in the industrial fields and at the domestic hearth, are the greatest stumbling blocks in the progress of the nation, employers, not only in manufacturing plants, but in stores as well, have inaugurated educational campaigns that are far-reaching and telling in their results. Classes are conducted at night in English or technical subjects, libraries and lecture courses are in reach of all, and home life is ultimately elevated by the study of cooking, sewing and millinery. The healthful and esthetic value of the comfortable home has been a hard lesson for some employers to teach, but they have built comfortable cottages, have let them at a nominal rent, and have kept them under the vigilant eye of sanitary officers with a general upward trend in social conditions as a result.

Organized Work Necessary.

Because many employes are indifferent to the saving of money, or ignorant of how it should be done, special instruction is often given in the arts of economy and the virtues of penny provident funds, while funds are established for insurance pensions or loans in times of need.

For some unexplained reason manufacturers and heads of industries employing large forces have been, in many instances, regarded as creatures like Mark Twain's devil, who wandered around "seeking whom he might devour somebody." Organizations have been formed for the purpose of forcing employers to inaugurate this or that movement for the benefit of employes, when long before such leagues came into existence there was work for social and industrial uplift being done after a desultory fashion in New England cotton factories, a Lowell firm as far back as the '40's having opened a "corporation boarding house," and southern cotton mills having certain beneficial plants for their operatives in use a quarter of a century ago. However, the enormous growth of manufacturing industries swept so many hundred thousand workers into the field that organized effort under the leadership of trained workers became evident.

The two first trained workers in the field, chosen with a view to instituting a system of improved working and living conditions among industrial workers, were Miss Gertrude Beeks, who became head of the sociological department of the Colorado Fuel & Iron company. Shortly after these came W. E. C. Nazro, doing like work for the Plymouth Cordage company. Now trained managers such as these can be numbered by the hundreds. Large employers recognize them as the best means of effecting plans for betterment. They know that in the words of Mr. Nazro, "Sympathy between the employer and the employe is the keynote to industrial peace," and that through competent direction of welfare work this can best be attained.

National Civic Federation.

When the National Civic Federation was organized by Ralph M. Easley, the present chairman of its executive council, one of the first departments for which he made provision was the welfare department, and of this he made Miss Gertrude Beeks secretary. This department is composed of employers of labor in stores, factories and mines and on railroads. It devotes its time to interesting employers in improving conditions under which employes in all industries work and live. It maintains a bureau of exchange at its headquarters here in New York, where information, data, photographs—anything helpful to an employer in establishing a welfare system of his own—may be had. It has called conferences of employers and welfare workers for the discussion of helpful plans, has sent lecturers through manufacturing centers of the north, east and west to explain the value of the work, and has been able to assist, either by correspondence or personal aid, approximately 100 establishments in their welfare work.

Richest Women Aid Workers.

Out of this welfare department has grown the woman's department of the National Civic Federation, an organization composed largely of women who are themselves stockholders, or who are financially interested through family relationship in industrial organizations. The chairman of this department is Mrs. Joseph Medill McCormick of Chicago, two of its vice chairmen are Mrs. J. Borden Harriman and Miss Anne Morgan of New York, and headed by prominent women of the country, such as Mrs. William H. Crocker of California, Mrs. Clarence Mackay and Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt of New York, and Mrs. John K. Ottley of Atlanta, it is spreading rapidly as an organization of influence, working to better the condition of employes.

Uncle Sam Gets Busy, Too.

The United States government had, until recently, displayed little direct interest in the welfare of its employes, beyond some work at army posts. Then, through the kind offices of the National Civic Federation, it was awakened to the condition of affairs existing in the naval factory and office buildings of Washington, in the postoffices of New York and Chicago, in the Brooklyn navy yard and on the Isthmus of Panama. Similar conditions having been found to exist among state and municipal employes, a public employes' welfare department was formed with Mr. Taft as chairman. It went to work with a will to look into and improve the condition of federal employes. The canal zone was naturally chosen as a scene of its first activities, since that was the nation's biggest enterprise. Miss Beeks was sent down to look into the working and living conditions of the employes, and submitted to Mr. Taft a most comprehensive report. She spent five weeks in looking into every phase of work and every kind of living condition. She discussed in her report street, water, electric light and sewerage systems, houses, hospitals, recreations, schools, jails, transportation and liquor traffic. While many things were highly commended, many were condemned, and her suggestions adopted.

Work of Great Corporations.

Welfare work runs the gamut of effectiveness and varies widely to meet the conditions of the people for whom it is devised. The Colorado Fuel & Iron company has 17,000 men, representing 32 nationalities, on its payroll, with 80,000 persons dependent on the wages of these for support. For these the company provides kindergartens, elementary, high, industrial and normal schools, churches, circulating libraries, hospitals, athletic fields and recreation halls, the work extending into four states.

When Cyrus McCormick became the first member of the welfare department of the National Civic Federation, he had 5,000 employes, where now the International Harvester company has 30,000, all enjoying the benefits that made his earlier welfare work a model widely copied. The Ludlow Manufacturing associates, with a yearly product of 95,000,000 pounds of jute bagging yarns and twines, with the most extensive warehouse system of any textile mill in America, have made a model town of Ludlow, and point with pride to the State Savings bank with its deposits of over $400,000, the savings of wage-earners.

The Pelzer Manufacturing company of Pelzer, S. C., began its work among mill operatives 25 years ago. The Victor cotton mills at Greers, S. C., the Monaghan mills of Greenville, S. C., the Proximity mills at Greensboro, N. C., and the Dwight mills at Alabama City have proved the most uplifting influence that the poor whites—who usually constitute their force of employes—have ever known. They have taken these people from their worn out, poorly tilled lands, have given them a living wage and have taught them the value of good homes well kept, good clothing well made, and good food well cooked, and have given them educational and social advantages before unknown.

The Plymouth Cordage company, with its big library and bathing beach, its model lunch rooms and its industrial schools; the Westinghouse Air Brake company, with its employes' benefit association, providing against sickness, accident and death, its laundry for overalls and its special interest in its many foreign workers; the Carnegie library of Homestead with its superior quality of lectures, classes and entertainments; the Gorham company, with its $20,000 casino for its employes and its benefit associations; the Solvay Process company of Syracuse, with its excellent village work for the families of the 2500 persons who are employed in their works and quarries; the Sherwin-Williams company of Cleveland, with its emergency hospital and rest room for women employes and its "top notch" efficiency system; R. H. Macy & Co., with their visiting physician and nurses and meal tickets for such of their 4,000 employes as need them—all these are proofs taken from a few of the many instances of the great uplift that welfare work is bringing to the people of the working world.

SMUGGLING RING IS UNDER FIRE

Certain Officers of Mongolia and Members of Crew Suspected.

(United Press Leased Wire.)

San Francisco, Nov. 26.—Charges that officers and members of the crew of the Pacific Mail liner Mongolia have been guilty of smuggling Chinese into this country by substituting returning Asiatics for newly arrived Mongolian sailors with shore leave, were investigated today. The investigation is expected to extend to other vessels plying between the orient and this port. The particular charge taken up today concerns the last visit of the Mongolia to this port. It is alleged that three Chinese sailors were released to visit Chinatown, the customary bond for their return to the vessel being deposited with the government's immigration bureau. Three Chinese sailors returned and the bonds were exonerated. It is now charged that the original sailors stayed away and three Chinese who wanted to return to their native land were slipped on board in their places.

In view of the charge that the investigation may involve more than one member of the steamer's crew, the immigration authorities propose to listen to testimony from Captain Henry Morton of the Mongolia and General Manager R. P. Schwerin of the Pacific Mail.

RATE FIGHTERS FIGHT EACH OTHER

San Francisco, Nov. 26.—The Merchants exchange, it is said by a member, is preparing a denial of the charge that its members are not sincere in their efforts to secure reductions in the freight rates when the shippers' demands are carried before the Interstate Commerce commission on December 1.

The charges were brought by the leaders of the California Traffic association, who declared that the traffic bureau appointed by the exchange was simply a body designed to check the activities of a genuine bureau.

Both organizations maintain that they are gathering data to present to the commission in order to secure a material reduction of railroad rates. They are not affiliated, however, and each is engaged in a rivalry that may defeat the purposes of the shippers.

In the meantime the canners and fruit men are preparing to send a delegation to this city to appear before the commission, irrespective of the representations made by both commercial bodies that have been gathering rate data.

7,000 MILES TO LOCATE HUSBAND

Over the Sea and Across the Continent to Hood River, Or.

(Special Dispatch to The Journal.)

Hood River, Or., Nov. 26.—What appeared to Mrs. Hans Johannsen the happy culmination of the tragedy of her life occurred yesterday, when she and her babe were placed in the arms of her husband here, after she had sought him vainly on a journey of 7000 miles. Mrs. Johannsen is a buxom, flaxen haired, blue eyed Norwegian matron and arrived here Saturday. In her arms she carried all her earthly possessions, a few months' old babe. She was looking for her husband, but not being able to make herself understood on account of her alien tongue, was unable to communicate her story until she was espied sitting in the office of one of the hotels by a newspaper man who was attracted by her dejected and pitiful appearance. Being able to converse slightly in the Norwegian tongue, he drew from her the story of her quest for her husband, who she had expected to meet her in New York. She had, she said, recently arrived in the United States from Norway, where she had been on a visit since last winter. When she left, her husband, who is a carpenter, was working in that city and she expected him to meet her at Ellis Island, the immigrant station at New York, but he was not there. From her story of the immigrant station she was evidently the victim of several sharpers, who promised to communicate with her husband, but who, after being given money, failed to return. From the island she went to Brooklyn and after considerable difficulty was told that her husband was in Portland. She started on her long journey for the Pacific coast. After several mishaps she reached the Rose City, found her husband's former boarding house, but again met with disappointment. He was not there. Finally she learned that he was at Hood River, but on arriving here could find no trace of him.

The newspaper man immediately got busy with the city authorities, who were also baffled for some time. But as it is hard to beat Hood River, and as everybody stays long enough to get what he wants, Hans was located Monday morning and came running to embrace Mrs. Hans and the little one, and blue sky and sunshine once more enveloped the Johannsen family.

TO HANG NEGRO WHO KILLED RIVAL

(Special Dispatch to The Journal.)

Washington, Ga., Nov. 26.—Tomorrow is the date set for the execution of the negro Ed Fallin, whose trial for murder took place before the superior court here several weeks ago. Fallin's crime was the murder of Robert Johnson, another negro, of whom he was jealous because of the latter's attentions to a negress with whom Fallin was infatuated. In the early part of June, Fallin slipped up to Johnson's house one night and fired on the negro while he was sitting on his porch. Johnson died the next day. The perpetrator of the deed was unknown, but as Fallin could not be found, and as the enmity existing between the two was well known, suspicion was at once directed to the runaway negro. Rewards were offered for his capture, and after several months of hiding Fallin was found by two other negroes and turned over to the authorities. He was captured only after a hard fight and after being wounded in the chase.

PEOPLE'S LOBBY AT SACRAMENTO

Good Government Men Propose to Keep a Line on Grafters.

(United Press Leased Wire.)

San Francisco, Nov. 26.—The Daily News this afternoon announces that a movement is on foot for the establishment at Sacramento this winter of a "people's lobby" to look after the passage of legislation favored by the good government organizations and to exercise a close watch over the operations of lobbies representing private interests.

It is understood that this announcement is in line with a general campaign which will be made by certain interests in behalf of the direct primary law and the anti-race track gambling bills.

In an interview on the subject Rudolph Spreckles said:

"In fighting against corrupt influences in politics, we must meet organization with organization. A sense of their obligations must be forced home to our representatives in the legislature and they must be made to feel that the people will not tolerate disregard of their will. I firmly believe that a committee, named at a mass meeting of citizens to attend the legislature during the entire session, could accomplish untold good."

It is probable that a mass meeting for the purpose of formulating a definite plan for the establishment of the people's lobby will soon be called. The purpose is to maintain an organization similar to that of the Citizens' union of New York, which keeps a force of legal experts at the state capital for the purpose of investigating minutely every measure that is introduced as revealing publicly every possibility of a "joker."
