Uplifters Work School System the Year Round, Day and Night—Children Who Must Be Taught to Play—"R" Added to Famed Trio.

By FREDERIC J. HASKIN.
(Copyright, 1908, by Frederic J. Haskin.)
New York City, Nov. 28.—One of the biggest things in New York's great uplift work is the using of school buildings as vacation schools in summer and as recreation centers in winter. There was a time when every schoolhouse in the land was solemnly locked in the afternoon of the school day, and after the end of a spring term, and kept closed to the memories of the "three R's" until the next opening time. Modern philanthropy has added another "R" to the list. It is the "R" of Recreation, and has asked that the schools be opened for its teaching. This is to be taught through playgrounds, recreation centers, and vacation schools, and New York is leading in the new work that has opened a new world. Already the great education work is being done here, where from an ever-increasing foreign population the department of education is making good American citizens to grace this, the largest Irish, the largest Jewish and the third largest Italian city in the world.

Out of a population of 4,000,000 there are 600,000 children enrolled in the schools. To many thousands of these the closing of the doors in summer would mean a tragic time, for coming, as thousands do, from congested districts where sometimes two whole families live in one room, they would be forced to an intolerable vacation existence on the streets. So the schools are reopened each summer for several weeks' work and are given over as play centers for certain hours of the afternoon and evening. Thirty-six of the city's 311 school buildings were opened last summer as vacation schools, and 21 are now used as recreation centers, 20 for men and boys, 11 for girls and women. The average daily attendance at these schools is about 70,000, and the cost to the city for salaries is about $170,000 a year, but it is considered money well spent.

Industrialism Chief Thing.
The vacation schools run for six weeks each summer, and in these the children who wish may study sewing, dressmaking, millinery, crochet, embroidery, domestic science, basketry, chair caning, wood work, iron work, burnt leather and such things, according to sex and inclination. Last year six of the schools had special classes for immigrant boys who wished to study English in order to go to work. It is expected to maintain in the future two or three schools for this specific work. In the summer afternoons these schools were open for play grounds. There were 48 school playgrounds last summer, including six out-of-town ones and 42 in the city. For eight weeks during the summer they were kept open from 1:30 to 5 o'clock, and there were instructors to teach the children how to play.

No Dull Boys, Though.
Does it not seem odd that there are children in the world who do not know how to play? Yet there are thousands of them. Play is not natural to the children of the slums. Quarrelling and fighting seem to come easier. To these the department of education has come, as Jean Valjean came to little Cosette, and playing toys in their hands it has said "play," and with no thought of standing by to interfere, they are trying. Those who came from the old fields were near, and those who were born in the slums of New York had nowhere to play until the department of education improved the condition of the poor and the Outdoor Recreation league made playgrounds for them. Even these are sometimes too crowded, and many prefer to go to the schools where there are supervisors to see that justice even in play is meted out to all, and where there are people ready and willing to devise for them new and wonderful games.

The "Little Mothers."
Most pathetic of the players who come to the centers are the "little mothers," the older sisters of big families who must care for the smaller ones, and who in their busy little world have never found time to even learn how to play. Nightingales are set aside for these "little mothers," and their charges. Hammocks were swung for the babies, and the little fellows set to playing in sand piles and the "little mothers," heretofore too tired and busy to enter their land, "make believe," have been given some of the best hood privileges denied them. Through the beginning of the department of education is beginning a big unit, which reaches into the tenement home life.

For in addition to their playtimes they are given a study period and are taught the proper feeding, bathing and dressing of their young charges, are taught simple housework, and the principles of home-making, and the principles adaptable and quicker to take suggestions than their mothers, they have been willing help in improving living conditions in a number of homes.

Playgrounds on the Roofs.
On the roofs of the more modern buildings are playgrounds. Last summer these were open every evening from 7:30 to 10 o'clock, and boys or girls who had been busy all day in factory work or sweatshop here or there spent the evening under the stars, high above the dust of the street, away from the wearying care of the day life. They heard good band concerts, or danced or sang in choruses under good instructors. The cost of these places last summer was $20,000, and the public baths connected with the playgrounds cost $10,000 more. But when it is remembered that these places drew young people who would otherwise have been in unhealthy homes, on the streets, or in the tenements, the cause there was nowhere else to go, the expenditure has already more than repaid itself in the good that it has done.

Think of working all day in hot rooms with little light and less air, in the districts where, after the tenement reform, there are still 300,000 tenement bedrooms in which people often work during the day. Think of the unsanitary conditions when evening comes but to this same food as well as the smell of the day, and then think what a godsend the roof playgrounds and the recreation centers are to these boys and girls, these men and women.

"Study, Work and Play."
There are circulating libraries in connection with most of the school playgrounds and recreation centers. Baseball, basketball and quiet games, are taught, with kindergarten games for the tiniest fellows. Miss Evangeline Whitney, superintendent of the vacation schools and recreation centers, has developed the habits which make sure our anchorage has three equally firm strands—study, work and play.

Through compulsory education study is given to all children in New York at school age. Through adverse conditions of society thousands become wage earners at children in New York at school age. Through the third strand, play, in the city's great task of giving education to the third class, this is the city's greatest task.

CHOSE DEATH IN LION'S CAGE

Disconsolate Lover Chooses Dreadful Fate When Girl Spurns Him.

(Special Dispatch to The Journal.)
Helen, Mont., Nov. 28.—An anomaly in the deer species was killed by Ben Jones of Cascade while hunting on Sheep creek last week. This freak was a doe with horns. It has been a very rare occurrence when such an animal has been found. Once in a great while a hunter has slain such an abnormality and it has always attracted the attention of the biologists. Mr. Jones was deer hunting on Sheep creek. Near the old Yank's sawmill, seven miles above Austin's ranch, the doe was jumped with two fawns trotting at her side. All there were killed. The hunters do possess two straight horns, which were still in the velvet. She was a large animal, weighing fully 175 pounds when dressed. The two fawns were two thirds grown and were as fat as butter.

National Apple Show Spokane.
The National Apple show to be held at Spokane, December 7 to 12, inclusive, will be an event of world wide importance and of far reaching results. The O. R. & N. will sell special low rate excursion tickets for this occasion. The round trip from Portland being $14.95. Sale dates, 6th, 7th and 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th, 15th and 16th. Tickets at O. R. & N. city ticket office corner Third and Washington streets.
