HINDU LABORERS AND NANNY GOATS OCCUPY SAME CAR

(Special Dispatch to The Journal.) Vancouver, Wash., Dec. 14.—Hindu laborers and nanny goats in the same car, eating, sleeping, all together, is the unusual sight near this city. The railroad companies hire Hindus for construction work near Vancouver and furnish cars for them to live in. The Hindus dislike the condensed milk furnished, so to overcome this they carry their own dairy in the form of live and wholly goats.

3000 SHEEPMEN IN CONVENTION

Unusual Features Will Mark Forty-Fifth Annual Idaho Meet.

(Special Dispatch to The Journal.) Pocatello, Idaho, Dec. 14.—Three thousand sheepmen will attend the forty-fifth annual convention of the National Woolgrowers' association, to be held in this city January 14, 15 and 16, 1909. The official call for the convention has been issued by President Fred W. Gooding, and the convention city has completed plans for entertaining the delegates.

This meeting will be the most important in the history of the national organization. Final and definite arrangements for the establishment of a great central wool market at Chicago will be made, and the questions of federal control of grazing on unappropriated public lands, government control of forest reserves and the maintenance of a protective tariff on wool will be considered. In connection with the convention a midwinter sheep show will be held, at which the city of Pocatello will distribute cash prizes aggregating $1500 in addition to the handsome silver trophy cup which the national association annually offers for the best individual exhibit. Already over 500 sheep in the roughbred and graded classes have been entered for the show, and the committee confidently expects that by the time entries close on December 15, 1909 sheep will have been entered. Announcement is made from national headquarters at Cheyenne that 15,000,000 out of the required 25,000,000 pounds necessary for the establishment of an immense market in Chicago have been pledged by growers in Wyoming, Colorado, Montana, Utah, Idaho, Oregon and Washington. Each state is required to sign up a certain number of millions of pounds of next season's increase to insure success to the movement, and by the time the national convention is called to order it is estimated that 50,000,000 pounds will be pledged and the market made a settled fact.

Under authority of congress, a government commission has resumed the work of excavating, repairing and preserving the Cliff Dwellings and other prehistoric ruins in Mesa Verde national park, Colorado.

Dalles' Merchants Threaten Change in Routing Eastern Shipments.

(Special Dispatch to The Journal.) The Dalles, Or., Dec. 14.—Local merchants will swing the big stick over the Oregon Railroad & Navigation company by threatening to do all their shipping from the east over the North Bank road unless the railroad company complies with the agreement to commence work at once on the $1,000,000 fill in the Mill creek gulch.

When the citizens of The Dalles agreed to construct a $75,000 hotel on Second and Union streets the Oregon Railroad & Navigation company agreed to make the fill and construct a fine depot in the immediate vicinity of the hotel. It was further stipulated that work would be commenced on the fill as soon as the hotel company raised the necessary funds to insure its completion. Not only have the funds been subscribed but the contract for building the hotel has been let and the contractors have been working their force of excavators seven days in the week in order to complete the preliminary work before the winter sets in.

"THE DEVIL" IN PORTLAND AGAIN

Quite a crowd of people went to night "The Devil" at the Hellig theatre last night. Although his Satanic majesty has visited the city once or twice before during the present theatrical season, the interest in his third coming was keen and he will undoubtedly get the money and the attention of large numbers of Portland people before he leaves the city after tomorrow night's performance. It is unnecessary to tell who "The Devil" is, except to say that he is represented in this instance by Ramsey Wallace, since he was commented upon at length when he made his first appearance in a different reincarnation some weeks or months ago. The reason for his appearance last night was to demonstrate through the medium of the stage that, given a talented young artist, a beautiful and high strung young woman who had once been the boyhood sweetheart of the artist, but who had later married an elderly millionaire, throw them into close companionship, garnish the scene with the promptings and plausibilities of the evil one—there can be but one result. After this has been demonstrated to the satisfaction of the audience, and the artist and his affinity have given up the struggle to be conventional, his Satanic majesty shrugs his shoulders, remarks "And there you are," and the curtain goes down. That is the play. Each and every one, separately, will have to make a personal examination to find the moral depicted. From the point of workmanship the production is good. Mr. Wallace was insidious and subtle in his reasoning. James Jennie as the innocent young artist who could not resist temptation did well. Elizabeth Murray as the banker's wife who could not forget the days of old, played her part well and dressed it well. Around these three the play was built, the lesser lights supporting the brighter consistently. The Devil will remain with us to-night and tomorrow night. GHOST OF MINER'S WIFE HAUNTS HIM

Seattle, Dec. 14.—He being haunted by the ghost of his dead wife, policemen were called to remove E. B. Smith, an Alaska miner and a resident of Belingham, from the Ferrin hotel during the night, where his loud cries kept the other guests awake. Smith claims he can see his wife continually.
