MISS ETHEL'S COMING OUT

President's Second Daughter Becomes a Society Personage Tonight.

(Special Dispatch to The Journal.) Washington, Dec. 28.—"The president and Mrs. Roosevelt are to give a small dance at the White House Monday evening, December 28, 9 p. m. Such is the simple announcement made for the social debut of Miss Ethel Roosevelt tonight, which promises to be by far the smartest affair ever given in the White House by the president and Mrs. Roosevelt, except the ceremonies attending the wedding of Miss Alice Roosevelt and Representative Nicholas Longworth of Ohio. The term "small" applied to the dance by the president and Mrs. Roosevelt is not to be taken literally. It is to be small only in that the invitations have been confined to Miss Roosevelt's friends and the younger people in the official set, whose parents figure on all formal invitation lists of the season at the White House. This means that several hundred guests will help the daughter of the president dance her way into the social world.

The Coming Out Gown.

The dance is to be given in the east room, where a small army of decorators were at work today converting the historic chamber into a veritable bower of floral beauty. There are to be elaborate floral decorations in all the rooms on the main floor of the executive mansion. In the main corridor the niches will be filled with decorative plants, stately palms and tree ferns. Behind a screen of rhododendrons will be stationed the magnificent Marine Band orchestra. A special program of music has been prepared for the occasion. The pieces were selected for the most part by Miss Roosevelt herself.

Miss Roosevelt's coming out gown is still a secret, but by good authority it is reported to be a white handkerchief linen embroidered in white forget-me-nots and made in an empire princess style.

Is Really Popular.

The debut dance is the one topic of Washington society today. It is not only because the debutante is the daughter of the president that so much interest is taken in her entrance into society, but that she has made so many real friends in Washington among all classes.

Of the young woman herself the public knows much through the public press, which has chronicled her personality to the fullest during the past few months. Miss Roosevelt has lived in the White House longer than any young girl in history, not even excepting Nellie Grant. During her girlhood in the executive mansion she has met the most prominent men and women of the country—but only as a child. Now she is ready to accept her inheritance to greet them on terms of mature equality. Perhaps no young woman in official life ever came to her responsibilities with better equipment.

Ethel's Attainments.

A year ago last spring Miss Ethel left the National Cathedral School for Girls. During the greater part of the time since then she has been putting the finishing touches to her education under the direction of a governess. She has paid particular attention to German and French. Although not by any means a brilliant musician she is quite talented, and possesses, in addition to a thorough education, upon which her father insisted, many accomplishments essential to the social success of a young American girl.

Following closely in the footsteps of her father and mother, Miss Roosevelt is an enthusiastic horsewoman, and not only drives a stylish dogcart with great vim and dash, but is a fearless rider. She rides like a young Amazon, with free and graceful abandon. She was one of the first of Washington's very young girls to take to the cross saddle.

Unlike her sister, Mrs. Longworth, Miss Ethel takes great interest in political and economic questions. She is fond of a political argument and it is whispered that she is not averse to engaging in a forensic tilt with her father in the seclusion of the family sitting-room.

Handsomest Roosevelt.

Miss Ethel often has been spoken of as the prettiest Roosevelt of this generation. She is tall and superb of figure, with a mass of chestnut hair and gray eyes so dark that at times they appear black. Her complexion is pure and clear, very much after the English style.

Miss Roosevelt has exquisite taste in dress, which has been cultivated by allowing her wardrobe ever since she was a small child. While not prim, she usually dresses in tailor-made gowns. She has inherited the literary taste of her father, and she also possesses, in unusual degree, for a woman, his love of animals. She paints a little in water colors, teaches a class in Sunday school, is fond of tennis and rowing, and, all in all, is a many-sided young person.

ENGLISH PEER SELLS LIBRARY

Lord Amherst Disposes of Costly Books to Satisfy Honor.

London, Dec. 28.—Two years ago book collectors all over the world were astonished by the announcement that the magnificent library of Lord Amherst of Hackney, one of the finest in the world, would be sold at public auction. When the most inquisitive looked around for a reason for this extraordinary action on the part of the famous English peer, who had devoted the best years of his life and a considerable part of his great fortune to the collection of his library, they were told that the noble lord was compelled to realize immediately a sum approaching $500,000 to cover a debt of honor incurred through the dishonesty of his solicitor.

Although the announcement of the sale was premature, events of the past few days have proved that Dame Gossip spoke the truth regarding the amount, but greatly underestimated the amount. A recent action against Lord Amherst in the English courts brought forth the official announcement that the amount which he had lost was not a mere $500,000 but more than $1,350,000, and the sale of his books took place last week at Sotheby's.

Although Lord Amherst is known to be an immensely wealthy man, owning as he does a large estate of Hackney, a suburb of London, the fact that he was compelled to sell his beloved library to meet his big obligations has occasioned little or no surprise in England. There are few Englishmen, even among the richest, who would not have to do a deal of chasing around and scraping to raise $1,350,000.

Parting Is Painful.

Most of them owe their wealth to enormous landed interests and, entangled and tied up as their property is under the English law, they would find it extremely difficult, if not impossible to convert any part of it into gold. So it was with Lord Amherst, and although it was much like parting with his life's blood, he was compelled to take a last fond look at his almost priceless Caxtons and his first folio Shakespeares, his covetly hands for the last time his historical bindings, and tearfully send them off to the auction room to be eagerly bid for by representatives of all the great collectors of the world.

Lord Amherst began his collection half a century ago, before the multi-millionaire American purchaser with the bottomless purse entered the scene. Thus he was able to buy at extraordinarily low prices and it is probable that the sale of the last week realized for him several times the amount of his original outlay. To enumerate the unique books that composed the collection is to speak beyond the writer's powers. His 17 famous Caxtons formed but one item in the long list. The collection of books and tracts on the Reformation and the Church of England had no rival outside of the British museum, including as it did Queen Elizabeth's copy of the 1558 Bishop's Bible and Charles I's copy of the "Authorized Version." One of the Caxtons is reported to be the only copy in existence of the first book printed in the English language.

Anxious to Pay Off.

Evidently Lord Amherst felt that it was necessary to pay the debts incurred through his solicitor immediately, for if he had had a few years' grace he could undoubtedly have liquidated them without sacrificing his library. His income is commonly and openly quoted at $500,000 a year, and for many years past he has probably lived up to it, entertaining lavishly at his Norfolk estate, Diddington Hall.

Both he and his wife, however, have achieved the so-called "smart set." He has no son, but no less than six daughters, and his title will go by special remainder to the eldest, Lady William Cecil.

Although there is not much likelihood of their being called upon to do so, each of the daughters is able to go out into the world and earn her own living, having learned some useful profession. For instance, Lady William Cecil is interested in horticulture; one of her sisters has taken up book binding; another is successful in poultry raising, and so on.

Lord Amherst was raised to the peerage as a baron in 1832 by Lord Salisbury. He is not to be confused with Earl Amherst.

PIRATE GOLD ON COCOS ISLANDS

New York Parties Organizing on Strength of Some Old Charts.

(United Press Leased Wire.) New York, Dec. 28.—Another expedition to the Cocos islands, in the Pacific ocean, the resting place of buried gold, is under way here today. Several unsuccessful attempts to locate the treasure have been made by L. H. Andrews, an attorney, and Davenport Rodgers, a former corporation to fit out an expedition.

Rodger owns several charts and documents left by a sailor of the Mary Dyer, a British barkentine, the crew
