NEW YEAR'S DAY AT WHITE HOUSE

Presidential Reception Surpasses Any Preceding in Roosevelt Regime.

Washington, Jan. 1.—In accordance with time honored tradition President Roosevelt held the customary New Year's reception at the White House today. Under the present administration these receptions have always been usually brilliant and today's event, perhaps because it was President Roosevelt's last function of that kind, surpassed in brilliancy and large attendance even that of last year, which held the record in both respects.

The grounds surrounding the White House had been put in perfect condition during the past few days and the White House, especially the rooms to be used for the reception, had been decorated with unprecedented magnificence. Plants and flowers from the greenhouses had been grouped in the different halls, rooms and corridors with exquisite taste, to form an artistic background for the gorgeous uniforms and court dresses of the diplomats and attending representatives of the army and navy.

Within certain restrictions the receptions at the White House on New Year's day are free to all and every year thousands avail themselves of this opportunity to pay their respects to the president and, incidentally, to gratify their curiosity. But, never had been greater the number of those craving admission to the White House than today. The lines in the grounds began to form long before 9 o'clock.

The Receiving Line.

Before the opening of the public reception President and Mrs. Roosevelt, assisted by Mrs. Nicholas Longworth and Miss Ethel Roosevelt, who has made her social debut only a few days ago, received the members of the cabinet and their ladies. The president, attired in the regulation frock suit, with turndown collar and a dark tie, seemed to be in excellent humor and chatted gaily with the members of his official family, while Mrs. Roosevelt, in a handsome reception gown, made the honeurs of the occasion to the wives and daughters of the cabinet ministers. Vice President Fairbanks and Mrs. Fairbanks headed the cobinet party and were followed in order by Secretary and Mrs. Root and the other members of the cabinet and their ladies.

A few minutes before 11 o'clock a trumpet fanfare heralded the beginning of the reception. The marine band, hidden in the corridor, behind a screen of ferns and palms, struck up an inspiring march and the receiving party, headed by President and Mrs. Roosevelt, descended the stairs from the upper floor, crossed the corridor and entered the blue parlor, where the reception was to be held.

Precautions Taken.

President and Mrs. Roosevelt took their position near the door leading from the red room to the blue parlor and the other members of the receiving party, in the order of their official rank, arranged themselves alongside, forming a semi-circle in the south end of the room. Around the doorway through which the visitors were to enter, secret service men hovered, who kept their eyes upon the guests as they passed through the door. Nobody was permitted to carry a handkerchief or muffler in his hand and nobody was permitted to pass along the line with hands in his pockets.

Ambassadorial List.

Promptly at 11 o'clock the doors of the red room were thrown open and the foreign ambassadors and their staffs, accompanied by their ladies, began to file into the blue parlor, where they were cordially greeted by the president and formally introduced to the other members of the receiving party. First came the dean of the diplomatic corps, Baron Hengelmueller, the Austrian-Hungarian ambassador, accompanied by the baroness. The ambassador personally introduced the members of his staff, all of whom were resplendent in their diplomatic or military uniforms. Next in order came the ambassador from France and Mme. Jusserand and after them the other foreign ambassadors according to their "anciennete."

New German Ambassador.

There were but few changes in the personnel of the ambassadorial party. Germany was represented by Count Johann Heinrich von Bernstorff, the successor of Baron Speck von Sternberg. He was accompanied by his wife, an American woman. China was again represented by Wu Ting Fang, who was accompanied by a gorgeously arrayed staff.

After the ambassadors came the ministers and minor diplomatic representatives, among them Count Molths, the newly appointed minister from Denmark and his charming wife and Swedish minister, De Lagercrants and his wife. The members of the diplomatic corps were later entertained at breakfast by Secretary and Mrs. Root.

After the diplomatic corps followed the supreme court and other judiciary and after the representatives of the army and navy had paid their respects to the president, the general public was admitted.

SWENSSON ASKS FOR RECEIVER

Alleges Sharp Practice on Part of Overlook Land Company.

On application of A. F. Swensson, late sales agent for the Overlook Land company, Judge Gantenbein in the circuit court yesterday granted a temporary injunction restraining the making of further sales until a hearing can be had on the application for a receiver to be appointed. This hearing will be had next Wednesday morning.

Swensson alleges that nearly $9500 is due him in commission and that he is about to lose this, as well as a large block of stock, because the company is spending all its money on improvements and because, as he charges, E. H. Wemme is about to foreclose to secure payment of a claim of $40,000.

The Overlook company was organized over two years ago to market about 85 acres of land in Overlook Park. Swensson found the land, and when the company was organized he received $16,000 worth of stock. H. R. Kincaid subscribed $10,000, A. N. Moores $15,000, E. H. Wemme $20,000 and George W. Joseph $4000. Wemme advanced all the money to put the proposition under way, except for $25,000 subscribed by Kincaid and Moores. Kincaid sold his stock a few weeks ago to Wemme.

Swensson was employed to sell the lands on a 15 per cent commission. Five per cent of this was paid when the lots were sold and went to sub-agents. It is claimed by Wemme and the other directors that Swensson agreed to wait for the other 10 per cent until the money advanced by Wemme, about $70,000 in all, was paid. The repayments were to be made at the rate of $200 per lot as each lot was sold, but Wemme waived this method of repayment in order that the money might be spent for improvements.

Dissension in the company broke forth at a meeting of the stockholders on December 12, when directors were elected for another year. Wemme and the other directors say they suspected that Swensson was not accounting for all the money as it was received, and after having experted the books decided to relieve Swensson of the office of secretary and to terminate his contract as sales agent.

Mr. Joseph, who was elected secretary when Swensson was ousted, says that Swensson always advocated the spending of the money in improvements, and never alleged that his commission was payable beyond the 5 per cent for sub-agents up to the time he was discharged.

"He then made a demand that the property be divided," said Joseph, "and said he would have a receiver appointed if we did not do so. We found that over $2000 was due from Swensson, that he had failed to account for. We discussed taking this shortagle before the grand jury, but decided not to do so because the company owes Swensson, and ultimately will pay him more than he has taken, although it is not now due.

"I am surprised that Swensson has brought a suit. Wemme has no thought of foreclosing on his claims, and he does not even hold notes for the money advanced."
