Tomorrow will be the first Tuesday of this bargain day inaugurated under the title of "Plentiful Tuesday" and symbolized by a full dinner pail. It will be a day of sledge hammer for the New Golden Eagle for price smashing, and a day of immense saving for the people who trade here. Tuesday is considered, among merchants, the dullest day, but if energy and good values can accomplish anything, we mean to turn this day into one of the banner days of the week. Out of the great savings they make on this day the working people and their families will have no difficulty to keep their dinner pails plentifully full. A full dinner pail is the emblem of toil, love and glory. He who earns his daily bread by the sweat of his brow is the highest type of free men—of American gentlemen. We see him in the work shop among shafts and levers, in the thunderous roar of wheels with nerves of iron and breaths of flame. We see him in the humble cottage, with his happy wife and sweet children, in an absorbing study of the commonwealth. We see him on the gory field of war, filled with shot and shell, the life slowly ebbing away among withered leaves. He bows to no king, he fears no power save that of God. He rules the destiny of the nation. He is a patriot and hero, a glory of the great republic; he is the son of toil. To him and to his family we give our moral and material support. To them we dedicate this day and the succeeding Tuesdays as the "Plentiful Tuesdays"—the day of plentiful values and great savings.
