CIVILIZATION IS LIKE THIN VENEER

Fire Water Reveals Nature of Indian Quickly, Says Veteran.

To Oregon on the "hurricane deck" of a mule came Captain Applegate, veteran Indian agent, more than 40 years ago. "I rascled along over the rough country ridin' part of the time, walking a heap more, but gettin' here to stick," said the interesting old man at the Imperial this morning.

Captain Applegate came to Portland to give evidence in the trial of William Barkley, an Indian charged with the murder of Sid Jacobs, a white man, near Klamath Falls. Captain Applegate is reputed to have better knowledge of the Indians in Oregon than any other white man.

"I know their names, I know their faces—I recognize them by their voices in the dark," he declared. "Much as I have been with them, I don't trust them. An Indian's civilization is a veneer and it takes a very little bit of firewater to melt it completely off. But keep the Indian away from the 'red eye' and he makes a fairly good worker. He teams or he farms with some success. But he loves his play days. Why, our Fourth of July celebrations beat Buffalo Bill to a Roosevelt frame. Singing, dancing, shooting, races—the Indians shut up shop for a week to celebrate. They think it's great to be patriotic that time of year."

For seven years during the early part of his Oregon history, Captain Applegate was in charge of the reservation near Klamath Falls. Several times since he has been called upon for an expert opinion concerning Indian nature. He laughs at the idea that rival factions summoned as witnesses in the Barkley trial may fight in Portland, declaring that the Indians now in Portland are the best of the reservation, and the most peaceable.

RICHARDSON TALKS TO MONTAVILLANS

Montavilla residents in mass meeting last night in the hall at the School of the Ascension, listened to an address by Tom Richardson of the Commercial club on the benefits to accrue to Portland from the annual Rose Festival. Mr. Richardson declared that because of its Rose Festival Portland would become as famous as a carnival city as New Orleans has become by its annual Mardi Gras. The speaker justified the movement of Montavillans to take part as an organization in the Rose Festival and encouraged them in their efforts to prepare a handsome float for the festival parade.
