ENOUGH MONEY FOR NEW BRIDGE

Bidders Will Construct Madison Viaduct for Less Than Appropriation.

Supervising Engineer J. L. Harrington and City Engineer Taylor completed the work of tabulating the bids for the construction of the Madison street bridge this morning, but would not give out the result of their labors, reserving their report for the executive board, which will meet this afternoon. It was learned, however, that the tenders of several bidders are low enough so that the viaduct can be built for less than the amount appropriated for its erection, $450,000.

At this afternoon's meeting the executive board will also consider the tentative lighting contract offered by the Portland Railway, Light & Power company. If the report of Chairman T. G. Greene, of the lighting committee, is favorable it is practically assured that a four or five year contract will be entered into.

"JOAN OF ARC" AT HARVARD

Schiller's Drama Produced as Spectacle—Maude Adams in Title Role.

Boston, June 22.—Crowds of visitors from New York and other cities have arrived here to attend the grand spectacular performance of Schiller's "Joan of Arc" at the Harvard stadium in Cambridge this evening. The performance, which will be on a scale of unprecedented magnitude and promises to be the greatest and most brilliant dramatic spectacle ever seen in the United States will be given under the auspices of the German department of Harvard university, by a special company headed by Maude Adams and under the artistic management of Charles Frohman of New York.

Schiller's "Joan of Arc" the English version of which will form the basis of the spectacular production, has been performed hundreds of times in various theatres in Europe, and occasionally in the United States, but even the largest theatres and companies were utterly inadequate for the representation of the heroic scenes and action of the drama, as contemplated by the poet-author.

Battle Adequately Reproduced.
Tonight, for the first time in history, the dramatic figure of the inspired Maid of Orleans will appear in a setting of adequate proportions. The enormous arena of the stadium will be the scene upon which several thousand men, carefully trained and drilled, will give a realistic representation of the battle on the fields near Orleans, in which the French were led to victory over the English by the inspired Joan of Arc. It will be a gorgeous spectacle, this battle, in which several thousand men, among them 200 knights and spearmen in full armor, garbed, accoutered, armed and otherwise equipped historically true to the style and type of the early part of the fifteenth century, will enact a wonderfully realistic battle scene, the like of which has never been seen at any dramatic performance in this country or in Europe.

Maude Adams as Joan.
Of course, Miss Adams, the Joan of Arc of tonight's spectacular performance, will be the principal character in the magnificent scenes of the presentation. Dressed in full armor and mounted on a snow white charger of Arab blood, she will gallop into the fray, bearing the banner of the Virgin, directing the French forces and leading them to glorious victory. She will be supported by a competent company of players and about 1300 supernumeraries.

An idea may be formed of the magnitude of the production from the fact that the properties required include 800 full suits of armor, trappings for 200 chargers, costumes, equipments and arms of various kinds for 1300 men, in addition to the scenery and thousand and one accessories necessary to make the presentation as lifelike and historically true as art and the most lavish expenditure of money can make it.

After many weeks of rehearsing in New York the entire company, with its trainload of scenery and properties arrived here yesterday and was temporarily housed at the Colonial theatre, where the final rehearsals of the principal actors were held, while the army of supernumeraries was taken to the stadium for its final rehearsals of the intricate battle scenes upon the actual scene of tonight's spectacle. The large special orchestra, which will play a "Eroica" symphony at the performance tonight, also rehearsed at the stadium yesterday and today.

It is said that Charles Frohman regards the Harvard performance as the most ambitious act of his long career as a manager. It will certainly be the high-water mark of the distinguished stage career of Miss Adams. Mr. Frohman was determined to make this performance an artistic success and gave carte blanche to Miss Adams and the technical managers of the spectacle. Never was money spent more lavishly upon a dramatic performance and the total cost will be enormous.

The entire financial proceeds from the performance—and they are expected to be large—will be devoted to the Germanic museum of Harvard university, which is one of the chief monuments to the administration of the recently retired President Charles Eliot. The arrangements for the performance were made by a committee headed by the German department of Harvard, under whose auspices the spectacle will be given. Every detail was carefully worked up by the artist John W. Alexander, assisted by Miss Adams and Mr. Frohman.

TRUMBULL SHOWS IMPROVEMENT TODAY

The condition of Bernard E. Trumbull, who was shot at Shaniko last week and which has been causing his friends some alarm, was reported as slightly improved this morning. Trumbull rallied so quickly after the shooting that it was thought he would recover without any serious trouble. Yesterday it was said that another operation might be necessary, but today it was reported that while Mr. Trumbull still had some fever, it is believed that a second operation will not be required.
