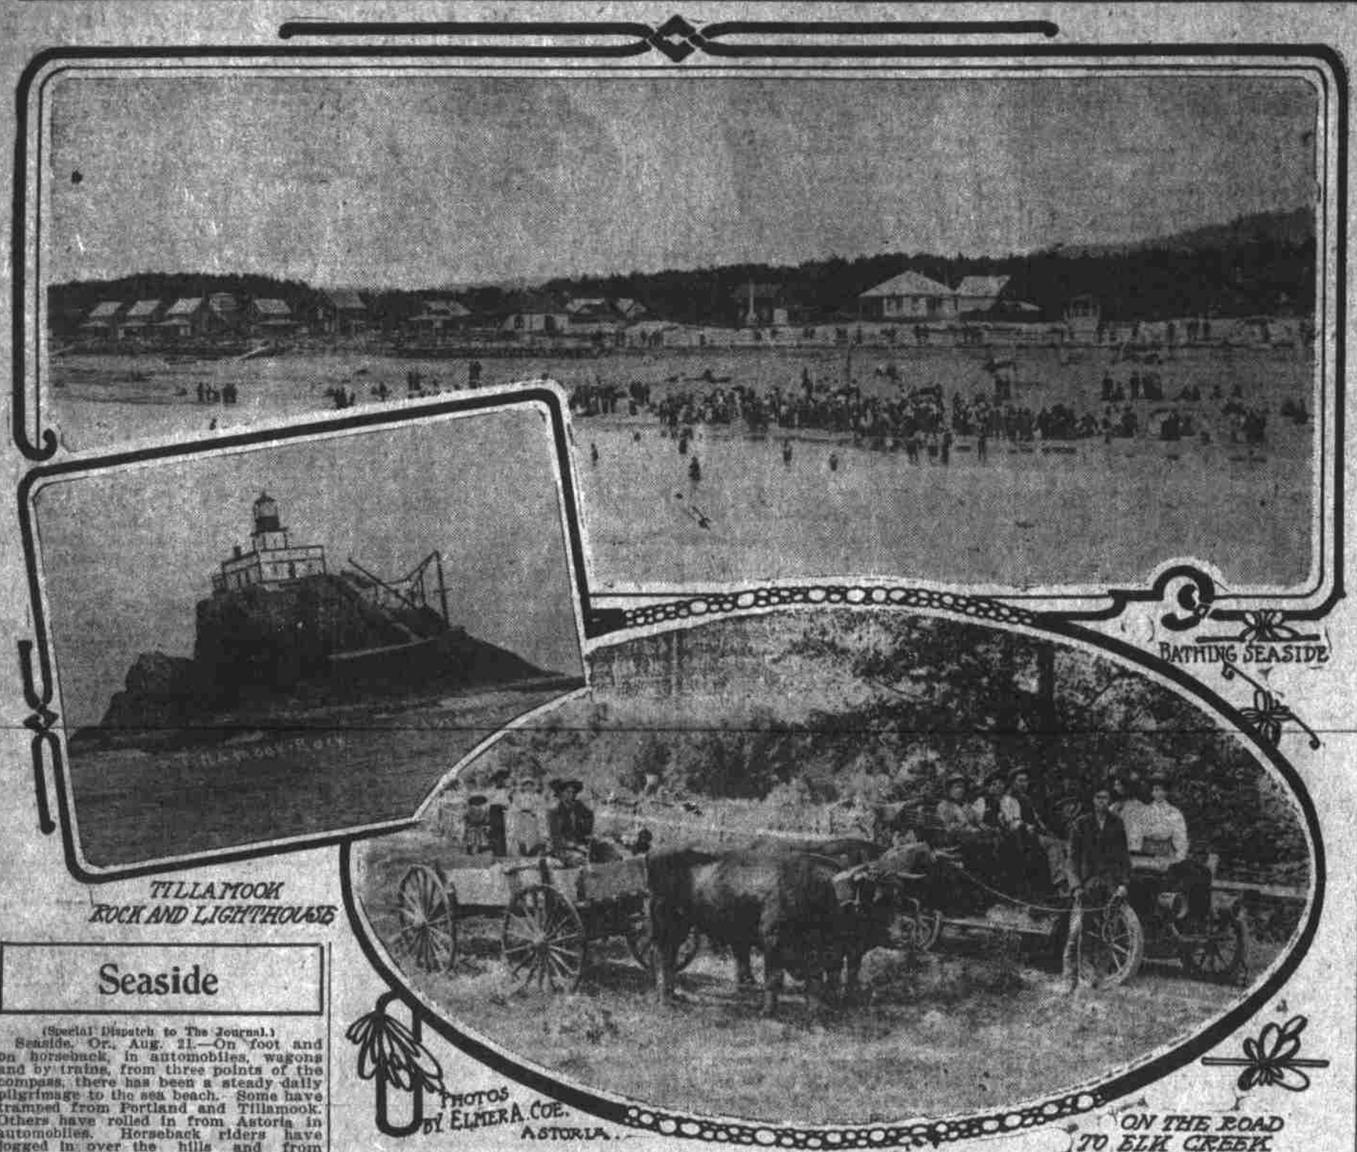
LIFE AT THE VARIOUS SUMMER RESORTS



Seaside

(Special Dispatch to The Journal.)

Seaside, Or., Aug. 21.—On foot and on horseback, in automobiles, wagons and by trains, from three points of the compass, there has been a steady daily pilgrimage to the sea beach. Some have tramped from Portland and Tillamook. Others have rolled in from Astoria in automobiles. Horseback riders have jogged in over the hills and from clouds of dust wagon party after wagon party has rattled into town. For hundreds who have not the inclination for the more strenuous means of transportation or whose limited time does not admit of a return to the simple out-of-doors life, the excursion trains have served as carriers to the shrine of vacation days. The little town is teeming and overflowing with a happy sea coast population and the good old summer time is in evidence on every hand. On the boardwalk, the sea beach and the Shell road it is a midsummer population decked in the whiteness and freshness of newly laundried linen, duck or pique which enjoys the cool ocean breezes. When evening comes and when Japanese mats and sofa pillows are brought out on the front steps of the cottages the snowy white of shirt waists and duck skirts marks the center of sea coast population. Then down to the town moves the throng of summer visitors. Their destination, if not the moving picture theatres, is probably the soda fountain or the dance.

All day long and in the evening boating parties go up the Necanicum river. Canoes glide under the bridges, up the stream and find a berth for the afternoon among the overhanging branches in the pellucid waters near the old Holliday house. The surface of the river is dotted with row boats, and the air rings with the pop and sputter of gasoline launches. Every day parties with Alpine inclinations climb to the top of Tillamook head and work their way over the great boulders to a point opposite Tillamook light house. The view from this point surpasses any on the beach. From the mouth of the Columbia river on the north, to the horizon on all sides, there is an unbroken field. The rugged shore line of the Oregon coast follows the waves till it fades off to silvery thread on the horizon.
