The Adjutant General Stops Checking Up of Colonel McDonnell.

Fate of "B" Street at Marshfield Still in the Balance.

(United Press Leased Wire.)
Muskogee, Okla., Aug. 23.—It became known today that the Red Top War society, which is composed of full-blooded Cherokee Indians, had administered a rebuke to President Taft that probably ranks deep in the presidential brain. Congressman Charles Creager, who has returned from Washington, brought him the rebuke to the president. The flag that floated over the White House the day that Taft assumed the directorship of the nation, was presented to the president by Creager, who was entrusted to present it in behalf of President Taft in the Indian society.

Later yesterday the executive committee of the rebuke's organization met and drafted a set of resolutions, a copy of which was sent to the president. The resolutions announced that they are desirous of inculcating the principles of Christianity among their young men; that their organization is in no sense a political one, and therefore if the flag is a trophy of the recent Republican victory at the national polls it must be refused with thanks.

and George A. Dean were schoolmates and cronies in Frederick, Md. Being successively a soldier, a pony express rider, a land dealer and capitalist, and now prominently connected with Portland business interests, Mr. Dean is now completing the thirtieth year of his residence in Portland. Mr. Dean was a marine engineer during the war, and later went into business in his home town, acquiring a competency and decided it to stay here.

Arriving in Portland, he passed a man on Washington street, who suddenly recognized him. "I don't know you," said Mr. Dean, but the man, who is now in his white hair and advanced years, was in spirit as much as when they parted more than a half century ago. Since the first meeting the old gentlemen have been putting in the time talking over the incidents of their boyhood and the events that have determined the lives of each other since. Mr. Dean is a guest at the Cornelius.

That Seattle feels the friendship of Portland is a good thing is shown through the message sent by the exposition management with A. A. Schell to Portland.

"The management," said Mr. Schell, "feels extremely grateful for the support of its warm supporters of the fair and recognizes that Portland and Oregon have been great features in the success of the exposition."

A tacit compliment, not expressed in so many words is in the appointment of a Portland man to take charge of the publicity work for Seattle, Sept. 6. Mr. Schell has been given the honor and duty of complete control of all the advertising for that day, which will be done aside from the regular publicity bureau. The arrangements for the day are elaborate for the Seattle celebration. The management will work for an attendance of 150,000 that day. The attendance on the opening day was 110,000 and while the daily increase looks overwhelmingly large it will be remembered that at the Lewis and Clark exposition the attendance doubled its opening attendance on Portland day.

The management looks for an immense crowd that day, said Mr. Schell, "and they are offering every inducement to draw the public. A feature of the day will be a military band playing by wireless telephone, the military band on earth below the balloon given in the evening at the exposition of 3500 voices. Smaller choruses and singing societies of various nations—Danish, Norwegian, Swedish, Finnish, German and others—will each give their own national anthems and the program will end up with 'The Star Spangled Banner,' sung by the entire band of choruses. This will be given in the great natural amphitheatre which is now under construction."

Adjutant General W. E. Finzer has decided that there is no need of finishing the check on Colonel C. E. McDonnell's accounts, reports until the return of the general from Camp Perry, and he has accordingly directed that the accounts submitted by Colonel McDonnell be passed over until his return.

Just prior to the departure of General Finzer from the east, Colonel McDonnell announced that he intended to resign. In accordance with the military regulations, General Finzer directed that the accounts of the colonel be checked up by August 23, as it is required that all accounts of outgoing officers be balanced before the departure of the officer from the service.

Colonel McDonnell turned in his accounts of state funds in his capacity as adjutant general before he left for the east. A short time after that he decided that he would not resign, but would continue at the head of the Third regiment.

Accordingly, there being no need of the accounts being made up, August 23, General Finzer directed Colonel James Jackson to pass the checking until it could be taken up in the regular order of business at the city and quarter, as required by the regulations.

This order apparently ends the sensational news of the resignation of Colonel McDonnell that he intended to resign. He has turned in an accounting of regimental funds, and the accounts of the adjutant general and found to be correct, with a balance of approximately $500 on hand. The current quarter's fund in the care of the colonel, will be supplemented with the accounts for the remainder of the present quarter, and the auditing clerk will close the end of the quarter, as is usually done with all official accounts of National guard funds.

"B" or not be—this is the question relating to streets, that Marshfield, Coos bay's coming city, faces. Marshfield had two streets leading to the water; the inevitable expansion made a third necessary. Overtures of purchase were made to the Dean Lumber company, but a condemnation suit and a verdict from federal court secured last April were made necessary before these overtures were seriously regarded.

The verdict promised Marshfield "B" street for the payment of $10,500. "B" street is a public street, and the Marshfield city treasury a little cash was found together with the records of a large amount of indebtedness, but not $10,500. The Dean Lumber company refused to wait, so the federal court granted a 60 days extension of time to get the money together.

The 60 days came to an end last Friday, and this morning Attorney H. B. Beckman appeared in the federal court in Marshfield, and asked for 60 days more. Tomorrow, he said, an election will be held to decide on the purchase of the street, and he will furnish the $10,500. There is, of course, the possibility that the people may not decide to part with so many dollars, and the street will be owned by Ben C. Day, counsel for the lumber company.

Wolverton decided, however, that getting "B" street for Marshfield was worth taking a chance on the popular decision, and ordered the extension of time, and the street will be owned by the city, and the amount owing be paid at the legal rate from the time the verdict was allowed.

New Building to Cost $30,000—Oregon Brass Works Enlarges Old Structure to Accommodate Business—Move in November 1.

Two important changes in Portland's industrial life came to light today with the filing of a building permit by the Pacific Metal Works for a new two story warehouse and foundry building to cost $30,000 on Park and Everett streets.

This permit also uncovered the recent transfer of the present site of the Pacific Metal Works, Second and Everett streets, to A. J. Peaper for approximately $4,000 and the building of the Oregon Brass Works.

According to the officials of the Pacific Metal Works, the new warehouse and foundry will be constructed entirely of steel and concrete. It will be absolutely fireproof and will be approximately 100x100 feet in size and will have a floor space of 10,000 sq. ft. with basement and will be constructed of steel and concrete. It will be two stories in height.

The foundry will be used in carrying on the present business of the company, while the warehouse will be used as a general storage place for stock and material. The building will be ready for occupancy by November 1.

Mr. Peaper, who is the owner of the site, has sold his present site at 73 North Second street corner of Everett, to A. J. Peaper for $4,000. Mr. Peaper in turn has leased the property to the Oregon Brass Works, which will move into the property as soon as it is vacated by the Pacific Metal Works. It is the intention of the management of the Brass Works to add another story to the present building which will cost several thousand dollars and make other important improvements. The second story of the present building will be used as the machinery room, while the ground floor will be used for storage purposes. This property is 50x15 feet ground dimensions. The Oregon Brass Works expect to move into their new quarters soon after November 1.

The Chamber of Commerce Transportation Committee Will Endeavor to Arouse Interest in Establishment of Steamer Line.

Portland merchants who have periodically talked of securing the share of the Alaska trade that naturally would fall to Portland but who have heretofore taken no active steps to secure this trade have embarked on a quiet but systematic campaign to compete with Puget Sound ports for this business.

The transportation committee of the chamber of commerce, which has taken charge of the movement, recently sent Secretary Van Hecover a letter requesting him to secure reliable statistics on the shipments of goods to and from the sound ports to Alaska. The information secured by Mr. Van Hecover has already been submitted to the officers of the transportation committee and it will be published in pamphlet form and distributed to members of the chamber.

It is said the nature of the report is such that Portland wholesalers need feel no hesitancy in embarking on this business. The records for last year show that Portland shipped about $71,000 worth of goods to Alaska. Puget sound shipped $13,385,287 worth of domestic merchandise.

The shipments from Alaska to Puget sound amounted to $29,778, of which gold and silver amounted to $13,044,532 and canned salmon to $16,733,746.

The distance from Portland to Alaska ports is practically the same as from Puget sound ports, Vancouver, B. C., having the most advantage of any of these ports. Mr. Van Hecover has already become a strong rival of the Washington cities for the Alaska business and the Canadian Pacific railway, which operates a line of steamers between Vancouver and Alaska ports is doing everything in its power to secure as much of this trade as possible.

The lack of a steamer line between Portland and Alaska is a detriment to the Portland merchants, but some plan to secure such a line is to be considered by the chamber. At present everything shipped from this city to Alaska by way of Puget sound is credited to Seattle or Tacoma, whereas the Puget sound secures no credit whatever, the only shipments showing being those by occasional steamers from this city to Alaska ports.

HENEY ADHERENTS DRIVE GOOD FOR FIGHT

Good Government League Prepares to Launch Race for District Attorney.

(United Press Leased Wire.)
San Francisco, Aug. 23.—Notwithstanding an interview with Francis J. Heney at Newport in which he is quoted as having said that in his opinion his nomination to the Democratic ticket was illegal and that he thought that he was ineligible to run on the ticket, the Good Government league of San Francisco is going ahead and preparing to launch a campaign for the office of district attorney, Heney being registered as a Democrat.

It is certain that Heney will run as an independent, and should the supreme court decide that his nomination on the Democratic ticket is legal, his name will appear twice on the ballot, as an independent and in the Democratic column.

DRIVE THROUGH GATE

A. B. Moores Is Fined $25 on Bridge Tender's Complaint.

A. B. Moores, of the automobile supply firm of Belmont, McDougall & Co., was fined $25 by Municipal Judge Frank B. Bennett and given a warning for driving through a gate on a charge of disorderly conduct.

Engineer McDonald, of the Burnside bridge, preferred the charge against the automobile man, accusing him of having driven his machine against the gates of the bridge, just as the draw was being raised in motion to open for a steamer. It was shown that Mr. Moores forced the gates open with the machine. County Judge L. A. Lightner sat on the bench with Judge Bennett while the case was being heard. As the county court they have charge of the bridge.

The morning there will be a grand parade on which $3000 will be expended, representing historical epochs of the north and west. The parade will be held in the city and quarter, as required by the regulations.

This order apparently ends the sensational news of the resignation of Colonel McDonnell that he intended to resign. He has turned in an accounting of regimental funds, and the accounts of the adjutant general and found to be correct, with a balance of approximately $500 on hand. ## Theodore Schmeiser Says Others Try to Steal Patent.

Theodore Schmeiser of San Francisco, inventor of an apparatus to make a heavy horse work as readily as a light one, filed in the federal court with a complaint of too much popularization. Schmeiser says he watched the way of horses many years resulting in the discovery of a very devilish ingenuity in the work of a man who was a rival of his, until they have shown their right so to do, to the satisfaction of the court.
