

AEROPLANE HAT NEXT IN ORDER

National Millinery Association Aeroplane Falls on Inventor; Mechanician Not Injured.

(United Press Leased Wire.)
 Chicago, Sept. 2.—(Next)—The aeroplane hat, it is "the" thing! So declare the milliners attending the National Millinery association meeting here.

The "mechanician" the "scoop" shopped the "merry widow" inverted shawl, decorated waste paper baskets and like feminine adornments which have graced ladies' heads this season will be condemned as too expensive and behind the times.

The aeroplane hat is almost as astounding as the long flights made by Aviator Curtiss at Rheims last week. It holds the record for a long distance flight of fancy, if its description can be used as a criterion.

It is a rectangular contrivance, preferably in velvet, moiré or berry color, somewhere between lavender and purple. The back of the "hat" is turned to resemble an aeroplane rudder and two vertical planes are built of two large wings which project from a sort of box like bit of gear which is arranged to perch over the right eye. That is the aeroplane hat, the predicted successor to the present popular creations.

REVOLTING IN EXTREME

that milk and manure had equal opportunities to mingle.

Grade as Zero.

"This dairy would grade zero per cent, according to the government score card which I use," said Dr. Mack.

"Conditions here are so horrible that something must be done at once," exclaimed Dr. Yenney. The reporter at the moment was so ill because of the evil smell and the filth that he was not able to venture an opinion.

This first dairy inspected was also the worst in none of the others which were equal number of condemnable conditions found. Lack of ventilation, failure to remove manure so that it would not get in the milk and the billions of germs constituted the most disgusting features of the remainder.

Passing on through the Columbia slough country the big dairy of Eger Brothers was the next one reached. In this dairy probably 250 cows are milked. It is the same dairy that Commissioner Bailey, inspecting, declared to be all right only to be followed by a government expert who was able to give only a grade of 30.75, when to make the milk saleable at all in places where inspection is rigidly enforced, double this grade is demanded.

Exposed to Dirt and Flies.

The cooling room was provided with a cement floor—the only cement floor found during the morning's tour. But flies swarmed over the manure in dirt and the flies. The barn had been moderately well cleaned, the feed was milk and alfalfa meal mixed, a combination that causes the cows to produce much milk but which in time almost literally buries out their digestive organs. Directly under the barn was a partially covered cement cess pool, having no outlet except as it oozed over the top.

Manure was piled up just outside the barn and there were many tons of it, fermented and decaying. The milk house had no drainage. Here manure, dirt and sourd milk was washed from the outside of the can, then the same water used to wash the inside of the can. One tub of water served for the washing of many cans. Outside the milk house was a draining trough partially filled with water, and the water was dense with wrigglers, or the larvae from mosquitoes. The investigation of the milk house was delayed and the cans were exposed to the pest of flies.

 San Leandro, Cal., Sept. 2.—Joseph Bettancourt is suffering today from injuries received yesterday when a monoplane of his own invention crashed to the ground and pinned him underneath the wreckage. John Driver, his companion, was slightly scratched when the machine struck the earth and Bettancourt, who was standing on the ground. Driver was in the aeroplane when the accident occurred. The two men were experimenting above the foothills. Yenney, the investigator had launched the monoplane from the top of an incline while Bettancourt stood below watching the flight. Suddenly the machine swerved downward and caught Bettancourt full in the chest, knocking him down and seriously injuring him on the left side. It is believed that several of his ribs are fractured. The machine was partly demolished.

Ventilation is Lacking.

Inspections of the Schneider, Both Mitchell, Kaufman, North Portland and Portland Dairy association dairies followed in rapid succession. It was generally found in the case of these dairies that the cows when in the barn were kept in a narrow lane, huddled close together with no ventilation, and with the manure in some cases caught in troughs, in others thrown behind the barn, where it accumulated in great foul heaps.

The Rookery dairy was better than most. Lack of screens and sanitary precautions were most in evidence in most of these places, too, it was found that the milk cans were allowed to stand unwashed many hours after the milk had been removed from them.

"The ease of applying a remedy, that is the fact that impresses me most," declared Dr. Yenney, the investigator of the morning concluded, and the auto turned toward town. "If they would only be clean their work would be easier. It would in the end cost less. If they had screens to keep flies out of the milkhouse it would be a tremendous safeguard. Take the instance of the last dairy we looked at."

Manure in Milk.

"The cows had just been milked. The milk was being passed over the cooler. The cooler was right in connection with the barn. Manure got into it, and we saw the manure in the milk. Flies accumulated in the strainer, and the milk was exposed to infection from the time it left the cows until it was put into cans.

"Now all I have to say is this: We won't dilly-dally about this matter any more. If Commissioner Bailey says the state board of health has the obligation to enforce sanitary regulations, we will give the dairies 10 days to get up into sanitary conditions. Great as is the danger from tubercular cows, it is small in comparison with the danger from the dirty milk, the way we have seen it this morning."

Dairymen Are Willing.

Another impressive conclusion growing out of the inspection made this morning was that the dairymen are ready and willing to cooperate in cleaning up. They gathered round the inspectors, listening eagerly to suggestions made, and saying that they will do anything in their power to bring their establishments up to the standard. Ignorance, not wilful neglect or indifference, seems to be their condition.

The willingness of the dairymen to cooperate in a cleaning crusade led to a few questions directed to Dr. Mack. They were:

"Doctor, have you ever obtained any data relating to local conditions from Commissioner Bailey?"

"I never have. I called at his office three times to get suggestions, and assistance, and never found the commissioner in, nor did I find anything in his office that would help me."

Tolerant of Bad Conditions.

"Do you find Commissioner Bailey regarded as a law enforcing, cleaning force, throughout dairies about Portland?"

"No. I have found wherever I have been that he is regarded as tolerant of bad conditions, 'friend' of the dairymen and doing little or nothing to make them clean up. And in this connection, if that is the case, the conditions in other dairies I have inspected are as bad, if not worse than those we found this morning. I do, however, find the commissioner to be politically a power among the dairymen."

 wonderful thing ever attempted by any man with courage enough to make a dash for the pole, accomplish his object unassisted by any other white man, then return alive and well to tell us it's the most wonderful achievement in the history of this generation, or any other generation, for that matter.

"I never entertained the slightest doubt that Dr. Cook would return, as I had absolute confidence in his courage and determination and will power. So when some friends of Dr. Cook tried to finance relief expeditions recently, I refused to subscribe to the fund, as I believed it might interfere with the plans of Cook."

"Naturally I am pleased with Dr. Cook's great discovery, and I believe that when he returns to his native soil the American people will hail him with the greatest welcome ever accorded to any American."

SCIENTISTS HAVE FAITH IN COOK'S DISCOVERY CLAIM

(United Press Leased Wire.)
 Washington, Sept. 2.—Scientists interviewed here today are practically unanimous in declaring their belief that Dr. Frederick Cook's word that he discovered the North Pole will be accepted without doubt, and that he will be credited with the greatest discovery of modern times.

Dr. Cleveland Abbe, editor of the weather bureau's monthly review, said today:

To a certain extent, such a discovery is a matter of taking the word of a discoverer. If a single white man makes such a journey, he will have made a discovery the man's reputation

PLAN TO RENAMER STREETS OF CITY

"The streets of Portland are to be named and numbered in a sane manner, which is bound to be especially good news to mail carriers, district messenger companies, delivery companies, and every stranger who seeks to find a number in Portland."

So said a member of the streets and alleys committee of the city council this morning.

In many instances in both east and west Portland two or more streets are carrying the same name, much to the embarrassment of mail carriers and others having to do with streets and street numbers.

And where in every other great city in the country 100 numbers run to the block, thereby enabling a person looking for a number to know exactly how many blocks his number is from the dividing street, the numbers in Portland run from 19 to 119 to the block. Unless a person is familiar with the district in which the number he is looking is situated, he is at sea about the distance he is from his number; he may be a block or he may be a mile.

For instance, in any other city a stranger seeking for No. 1290 knows without questioning that his number is just 12 blocks from the dividing street, so that if he happens to be at 600 on his street he knows he has but six blocks to go. A stranger is looking for 1290 in Portland. He is standing at 600 and says to himself, "It's only six blocks. I'll walk."

That is, he thinks he will walk. But he is disillusioned, poor man, after plodding wearily along a dozen blocks, and finds that he is still several hundred numbers from 1290.

Mayor Simon wrote Postmaster Young today, saying that the streets and alleys committee of the city council now has under consideration the matter of renaming and renumbering all of the streets in Portland.

"It seems almost too good to be true," signed the postmaster, as he read Mr. Simon's letter, "but here I have it from the mayor in black and white and when this work is done it will be another step towards making Portland a model metropolitan city. The postoffice department in Portland has more trouble and genuine grief with the repetition of street names and the street numbering than in all other cities in the country put together."

W. J. BRADBURY NOW NO. 23753

(United Press Leased Wire.)
 San Quentin, Cal., Sept. 2.—William J. Bradbury, the aged Curtis Madera millionaire who was convicted of perjury, was taken to San Quentin prison today by Sheriff Taylor of Marin county. With him a prisoner Taylor left San Rafael in a buggy at 3 o'clock and at 2:45 Bradbury lost his identity and became merely No. 23,753. Before entering the prison door the aged man turned appealingly toward a guard standing between him and freedom.

"This is awful," he sobbed.

The next moment he was ushered into the prison yard and in a few short minutes he had been photographed, given a bath and a shave—then stripped of his stripes and was allowed the freedom of the prison yard.

Tonight he will be assigned to a cell and unless pardoned by the governor, will serve out his one year term working in the jute mill "stuffing cans" by day, sleeping on a straw mattress at night and eating nothing more than the plain prison fare which is fed to other convicts.

When the millionaire emerged from the barber shop, clean shaven and with
