POLICEMAN HAZARDS LIFE TO SAVE DOG

(United Press Special Wire.)
 San Francisco, Sept. 24.—Harry Green, a special policeman, risked his life today to save a dog that was locked in a cage in the interior of a burning saloon on Post street.
 The dog was nearly asphyxiated when Green came running up to a fireman, seized his ax and burst open the door leading into the saloon. The next moment he disappeared in the dense smoke.

A rescue party was preparing to go after Green, who, it was believed, had been overcome when he staggered from the interior bearing the unconscious dog in his arms.
 Notwithstanding that he was bleeding from a score of cuts received while forcing his way to the animal's cage, Green set about reviving the dog. At the first sign indicating that the dog was not dead the man picked him up and hastened to the central emergency hospital, where for the first time in his history the hospital physicians received a dog for treatment. The animal was quickly revived by the doctors and Green took it to a dog hospital for further attention.

 The dog is a blue ribbon bull terrier and has long been a favorite with Green.
