This four-act play of social and finan-tial life is the brain labor of Olive Por-er, assisted by Mrs. Frances Van France, and is distinctly feminine in its onception and development. Plays of Vall street have been too numerous of ate to be filled with surprises, and this test edition contains no illuminating atures. There is little humor, the ness are commonplace, the situations cline toward vague possibilities, and the character drawings are largely impaire and not particularly apt. It besites to the situations of the character drawings are largely impaire and not particularly apt. It behe character drawings are largely im-tative and not particularly apt. It be-bags to "The Man of the Hour" branch the play family, but comes to us with one of the latter's brilliance and power. Mr. Richard Hillary, the "ringmas-ur" of the street, and his associates, selfit to "discipline" a certain Colorado, ining company, whose business meth-is are too decent to meet with the ap-roval of said magnates. To form a de-tred copper trust, it is necessary that

This remark certainly sounds startling these days of cleanliness and hygiene; t the introduction of such a soap power as Gold Dust has made the slow-esolving cake of soap a back number. The reason is simple. Soap must disive before it can soften water or resolved to make a soft map before it really effective for washing clothes. The Ringmaster" was stormily resided at the Star last night. Perhaps he unqualified approval of the audience can best be shown by an incident of act three. At a crucial moment, a dazzled auditor in scarlet shirt was so carried away with the mummer's art that he made for the stage to settle the complications after his own rashion, only to be computed from the theatre by a couple for policemen, amid what for a time hreatened to become a panic.

of affairs financial. But, when the infamous schemes of Hillary and associates are unfolded to him, Le Baron declines to ally himself with them, and, on the other hand, exacts from them a promise to desist in their efforts to ruin the Colorado company.

While entertaining a party of friends on his yacht, among whom is the daughter of Richard Hillary, Le Baron stumbles upon a wireless message from Hillary to his private secretary, revealing the fact that Hillary, contrary to his word, is pursuing his machinations against the Colorado company. Whereupon, Le Baron, though he has that day ing the fact that Hillary, contrary to his word, is pursuing his machinations against the Colorado company. Whereupon, Le Baron, though he has that day become engaged to Miss Eleanor Hillary, abruptly returns to New York and begins a campaign to defeat her father.

Under great stress, and against powerful opposition, Le Baron makes a brilliant stand for right and honesty, and the final curtain presents him as one more example of the fine old maxim that the best man always wins.

We are told that the company came direct from the Maxine Elliott theatrs. New York, but their stage deportment leads us to suspect that the coveted Broadway stamp has yet to be attained. Frederick Montague's portrayal of The filingmaster was given to rant and lincked that finesse that we are wont to expect from a man who plays the Wall street game successfully. H. S. Northrup, as John Le Baron, was always found in becoming attitudes, and was good looking enough to capture the hearts of the Star audience. He gave a convincing performance in that it would have taken a poor actor to have succided so splendid a part. Miss Alice Weeks plays Eleanor Hillary, and plays her badly, but her gowning was the one striking feature of the evening. She shows four adorable creations, a lavender tollette worn in the third act being altocether stunning. Miss Rosamund Carpeder makes a Rebecca Love a fomping cutten A silly and inane characterization of Mrs Alice Bradies is that furnished by Miss Clare Coliman. Elobert Barron as Peter Sturresant Cebb is a Invention of Mrs Alice Bradies. The remainder of the cast accords well enough with the production. With the

The plot, if it can be dignified by such a name, is put in motion by George Hay, a Yale student, who undertakes to find two college men for his father who do not smoke cigarettes and who do not use slang. Enter Al Harrison and J. E. Coughlin as Michael O'Toole and Hennessy O'Brien, respective bricklayer and hodcarrier, accompanied by divers and sundry brick bats and tin cans. They are straightway given money by the hopeful George with which to buy a college "get up" and be the two desired students for his father's benefit. Throughout the rest of the piece they struggle valiantly in their new role of students and produce comedy which is strongly reminiscent of Murry and Mack.

And then came Max Bloom riding on the horse. As Abey Tiredhelmer, a Hebrew who sells clothes and later plays at being a "colleger," he radiated comedy of a particularly happy sort, although there were times when a certain suggestiveness which passed for comedy might have been cut out without materially injuring the play. Stage animals seen in a long time. The Wents twins later did a clever dancing specialty and scored a hit.

The women of the cast were pretty and wore stuming gowns. In addition to good looks, Marie Montrose has a sweet soprano voice, which she used to good advantage. Carolyn Ryan cannot sing, but her good looks and clever personality make you forget it when she tries. Don Clark, as George Hay, is the busiest person in the cast and does good work throughout.

The chorus is young, pretty and can sing. The piece is filled with an unusually large number of good musical numbers. The finale of the first act, sung by Miss Montrose and the chorus, with real water coming down as rain, was one of the hig hits. "The Sunny Side of Broadway" will be at the Baker all week, with the usual matinees on Wednesday and Saturday.

"The Flagship" at the Lyric.

"The Flagship," presented by the Athon stock company at the Lyric yeaterday proved to be one of the greatest successes that this favorite company has yet presented. The quaint characterizations of the rural Kentuckian in all his simplicity and hospitality is set forth in a word picture in the first act that withstands any attempt at explanation.

The trend of the play leads its audience from pathes to humor with a rapadity that runs from one emotion to emother, from Kentucky to the Philippines and the scene on board the battleship "Oregon" is apectacular in its presentation. Allen's Foot-Ease

MANY IMPROVEMENTS COMING TO CORVALLIS

(Special Dispatch to The Journal.) Corvaliis, Or., Sept. 3.—Civic pride has gotten busy at Corvaliis and visitors of the future will find splendidly paved streets in the college town. Bids have been received from numerous paving concerns, but the plum was given to the Warren Construction company of Portland. The council, at a special meeting last night, made the award and decided to have sixteen blocks paved with bitulithic hard pavement. The price made by the Warren company was $2.15 per square yard, and the contract specifies that the work must be completed by July, 1910. Another improvement completed today is the new reservoir, with a capacity of 500,000 gallons. The Corvailis water supply comes in pipes from Mary's mountain, 17 miles away, and while the supply is unlimited, the new reservoir will furnish a large auxiliary supply in any emergency that might arise. BRIDGING SANTIAM

(Special Dispatch to The Journal.)

Lebanon, Oct. 11.—The state railroad commission has been asked to withdraw the mandamus proceedings requiring the Oregon & California Railroad company to build a railroad bridge over the North Santiam river near Crabtree. The reason for this request is that the company is building a bridge near Lebanon, which will meet the demand. The commission refuses to withdraw the demand at this time, on the ground that the company must show good faith in proceeding with the construction work. From the apparent mannet in which the
