

QUICK WORK WILL BE DONE IN TESTING COWS

All the inspectors which the bureau of animal industry will place at the disposal of the state board of health will be utilized in testing for tuberculosis cows of dairy herds from which milk is sold in Portland. Dr. A. W. McClure, head of the bureau at Pennington, will receive a letter this week written by Dr. Robert C. Yenny, state health officer, asking that all the inspectors competent to make tests, who can be spared for the work, be sent to Portland at once.

Dr. McClure announced some time ago that the government was prepared to spend probably $50,000 in eliminating consumption from the dairy herds of this state, and that he was assured with the proper leadership the work which is to be done in the vicinity of Portland can be completed by the first of July, 1912.

"I wonder if the people of Portland understand how much they are getting for nothing," said Dr. Yenny this morning. "The salaries of the inspectors alone will cost all the way from $500 to $1000 a month. These government men will do work which could not be practically done by local authorities at any price. The tuberculosis used in the test is also a big item of expense. It seems to me that the new ordinance which provides for the utilization of every possible local dirt and disease correcting agency is just about the best thing possessed at the present time by any city in the United States."

will be observable. Improvements such as can easily be made. For local or city inspectors to be vested with the authority of the state dairy commissioner's office is a great deal. It seems to me that we have gained just about all that we needed, except an actual carrying out of the plans formulated, and for this actual work we have more reason to hope than at any previous time in our experience."

Dr. Yenny returned yesterday from Walla Walla, where he has been visiting several days with his parents. He left this morning for Oswego, where some cases of typhoid, which demand the attention of the state board of health, have been reported.

Two recent reports of tests for tuberculosis made by Dr. McClure to the state health officer show that the state of the herd and the distance from the land are governing practically the amount of tuberculosis found. Herds with only a few cows in them are usually nearly free from disease, Dr. McClure reports.

The least disease of all has been found by his inspectors in herds which were furthest from the city. All dairies where herds are tested for tuberculosis are also scored by the government inspector and this will facilitate the work of inspection to be undertaken by the city board of health in conjunction with the state dairy and food commissioner, to a great degree.

Reports on Herds.
Dr. McClure's reports show that the following herds have been tested:

Well Prepared for War.
"It is probable, too, as we enforce our new ordinance that improvements in the score of the dairies where tested ran from 10 to 85 points out of a possible 100. Usually the fewest diseased cattle were found in the cleanest dairies. All cows found by test affected with tuberculosis have tags placed in their ears. The majority of tubercular cows in herds so far have been eliminated by the owners."

LABORER DIES ALONE IN RAIN AND COLD

(Special Dispatch to The Journal).
Husum, Wash., Nov. 30.—An Italian named Tony Rega was found dead on the rocks near McCredy station, in the eastern part of the county. An investigation proved he had been working in a railroad camp near Spokane and was on his way to the Deschutes camps. It is supposed that he was taken ill and had laid down on the rocks in the rain and cold, where he died. A gold watch and $88 in money were found on his person. He was buried in the Six-prong cemetery.

READS OF INTEREST IN IRRIGATION

E. G. Hopson Gives Interesting Information on a Popular Subject.

E. G. Hopson of the reclamation service delivered an interesting paper on the reclamation work of the state. The paper was read before a meeting of irrigators gathered at the Commercial club at Pendleton. The paper in part was as follows: "The reclamation service is an institution with which you are all familiar. As an institution or instrument of the government, the service is intended primarily to aid the arid and semi-arid west to come into the world as a part of the forces of nature to supplement the skill of man; and in order to accomplish this end, which is essentially the creation of national wealth, the means derived from the western country itself are utilized.

"The president of the United States has declared the policy of his administration to vigorously push the work of government reclamation, and toward this end he has further stated his intention to ask congress to pass laws that will greatly augment the funds at the immediate disposition of the reclamation service. I see in a recent press report from Washington that Mr. Garrison, the secretary of the interior, has been preparing an act for submission to congress authorizing a bond issue not to exceed $30,000,000.

"A narrative of irrigation development in our western valleys is practically the history of the west. From scattered tracts along the river bottoms and dug small ditches to water their pastures, alfalfa or garden patches, until the more recent developments of large irrigation systems, the history of irrigation and its use of modern engineering construction works, the history is one of contest, waste and misdirected effort. The reasons are obvious. In lacking two elements have been lacking, both of them all important; these being proper organization and regulation.

As to Water Rights.
"The great uncertainties that have existed as to individual rights and priorities to the waters of the streams whereby no man has been fully assured that the water he uses today may be his to use tomorrow, and the lack of any prompt impartial umpire armed with power and ready to mete out prompt justice, has in many localities resulted in 'bitch wars' whereby individuals and organizations have not felt fully justified in going ahead with the more important and comprehensive plans necessary for the development of the highest order of irrigation. Therefore, more and more, and frequently plans were made with a view to immediate returns rather than for permanent beneficial results.

"As an excellent illustration of this point may be found in the great Yakima valley in the state of Washington. Irrigation in that valley dates from the earliest settlement of that country. The lands there are in many respects ideal, not only in fertility of soil but in topography and climate conditions. From almost every conceivable standpoint this valley seems to be an ideal one for intensive development. The Yakima river must have appeared to the earliest settlers in the valley as practically inexhaustible, with its minimum summer flow of some thousand cubic feet per second. Such, however, proved not to be the case, for as development progressed and canal after canal was built, each one using more and more water, it was found at last that during the summer season not only all of the flow of the river was actually diverted by the numerous canals used, but that many had been largely evaporated by the various fillings that had been made by would be appropriators. This condition may appear to some of you as having a sort of familiar ring, even here in Umatilla county.

Reclamation Act Passed.
"About this time the reclamation act was passed, and one of the first ideas that occurred to the people of the Yakima valley was to urge the claims of their country to the consideration of the government. The government responded to the demands in a reasonable way, made surveys and estimates, and concluded that although the valley would be one of the most promising fields for government irrigation, nevertheless, in view of the uncertain conditions of water rights, the government should not undertake the absolute uncertainty in all matters of water appropriations and priorities prevailing it would be unsafe to start any government project unless the disagreements could be adjusted and a solid basis of agreement reached. In short, the government finally told the people of the Yakima valley substantially this: 'Gentlemen, reach some agreement among yourselves as to your rights, limit your demands in reason, and the government will start and direct future development. Otherwise, it will keep its hands entirely out of the valley.' The final outcome was that people got together all along the Yakima river, held conferences, considered the claims of the government, and finally drew up among themselves an agreement signed by practically all the water users limiting their claims to reasonable amounts, which in their aggregate did not exceed the actual flow of the stream. Thereupon the government proceeded with its plans as it had promised.

Opportunities in Umatilla.
"We have in Oregon, and in Umatilla county, opportunities as good, although not perhaps so extensive as in the Yakima valley. You have water, fertile soil, and a climate I believe to be even better than they can boast of in Yakima. Your altitude is generally less than 1000 feet above sea level, while in Yakima the altitude is between 1000 and 2000 feet. You have some winds, but not greater than they have in the Yakima valley. From careful observation of conditions in the Columbia and Umatilla valleys in Oregon, and comparison with the localities at present enjoying a larger share of popular favor, I have satisfied myself that conditions here are such as may well warrant your re-examination as to ultimate complete success. I look to see during the next 10 years as high bona fide values for fruit lands at Hermiston as at North Yakima, under the Sunnyside canal, or at Kennewick, and an equal amount of individual prosperity.

"The government project at Hermiston is now about completed as far as construction is concerned. Next year I hope to see 15,000 acres under the ditch, but I more particularly desire to see these 15,000 acres all in actual cultivation. I believe, however, that 1910 will see more active steps taken to subdivide and sell large holdings under this project and thereby increase the number of homes and the productive acreage. It must be remembered, however, that Hermiston was not built in a day, ever, that Hermiston was not built in a day, nor can a great agricultural community be created in a year or two. Be that as it may, it is not assumed that any lands under this project will remain outside of cultivation for any length of time, and, all things considered, we may well look upon this project as a success, and an important step toward the building up of this end of the state.

"The Umatilla project covers about 20,400 acres of irrigable land, that being practically the limit of what the works now planned can supply water to. Large areas of desert land outside this project have, however, been reserved for future extension.

May Increase Project.
"It is, I believe, possible to increase the Umatilla project to an ultimate total area of 100,000 acres, or five times the size of the present project. You people of Umatilla county will realize what it means to have 100,000 acres of first class land in a solid body added to the resources of your community. I am glad to state, moreover, that about one half of the lands reserved for future extension is unentered public land, and much, if not most, of the highest quality. This should give everyone who desires a reasonable chance of a free irrigated ranch. The government has already taken tentative steps to provide a water supply by perfecting its plans well in advance should it ever be determined by the interior department to go ahead with this work. Valuable water powers to be utilized for pumping purposes have been reserved, reservoir sites have been withdrawn, and plans have been prepared in compliance with the plans compiled by the government will provide for the most complete utilization of the natural resources of this county, and in fact of this end of the state."

Bank Deposits Gain at Prineville.
Prineville, Or., Nov. 30.—A statement rendered by the local banks shows a gain of almost $100,000 in deposits during the past three months.

The total resources of the First National bank according to this statement are considerably above the $500,000 mark and is constantly increasing, as the statements are rendered from time to time. This increase is noted in spite of the fact that new banks are being started in various parts of the county and the deposits are materially affected by some of these.
