

LAVISH DISPLAY OF WEALTH AT GOULD WEDDING

When Miss Marjorie Gould Becomes Bride of Anthony Drexel Jr. Society Will Necessarily Take Notice.

By Margaret Watts De Peyster. (Publishers' Press Leased Wire.) New York, Feb. 5.—The wedding of Miss Marjorie Gould, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Jay Gould, to Anthony J. Drexel Jr. of Philadelphia, will mark the latest work in lavishness. The wedding will be the most ornate, the most exquisite in decoration and the most brilliant in riches ever seen in this or any other country. The lavish affairs of Rome and Egypt, feuded in their magnificent splendor will be pigny compared with the ornamental nuptials of these two young scions of America's rich and fashionable society. A fortune will be spent upon the bride's trousseau, which will be made in Paris; another fortune will be spent upon the decorations and equipage, another fortune will be spent in gifts, a fourth fortune will be spent in entertainment. A fifth fortune will be spent in speeding the young bride and groom forth upon their bridal journey.

The details are far from settled, as the announcement of the engagement leaked out before the families were ready to have it known. The Drexels move in the inner circle in Philadelphia, New York, London and Paris. Mrs. Drexel has entered the palace of King Edward, and she was one of the few American guests at the wedding of the daughter of Mrs. James Henry Smith to Prince Michel of Braganza in Scotland last fall.

Miss Gould only recently made her debut. She has been reported engaged to a Russian grand duke, whose name is really too extraordinary to write, the Duke of Albu and Captain Paget, son of Sir Arthur Paget.

Sufficient it is to say that America has never seen such a wedding as this will be. Even Europe with its familiarity with American multi-millionaires' foibles will gasp with astonishment.

Great Sum for Pleasure.
This has indeed been a season of stupendous expenditures by rich American women. I do not mean in charity, but for pleasure. Mrs. John Stewart Kennedy, widow of the late banker who inherited $14,000,000 from her husband's $50,000,000 estate, summoned a party of relatives and intimate friends to go with her on a trip around the world. I understand the party has reached Gibraltar and will proceed thence to Africa. Mrs. Emily Ladenburg, widow of the rich broker, Adolph Ladenburg, established a unique record in the annals of celebration when she ordered her $50,000 from her husband's estate. The estate was in litigation, but the decision favorable to Mrs. Ladenburg had been rendered only a few hours until the wealthy widow had sent 50 invitations to her society friends to gather at the Plaza hotel for a dinner party. Even the Plaza, the most stylish hotel in Manhattan, was not embellished sufficiently for Mrs. Ladenburg, and she soon had an army of artisans placing new decorations in the great banquet hall. The dinner was followed by a large party, after which there was a big dance and bridge whist party. It is said that Mrs. Ladenburg spent more than $50,000 upon this single entertainment.

Owens to Astor.
The world's largest automobile, thinks that Colonel John Jacob Astor devotes his time and attention exclusively to yachting, but let me whisper that Col. one Astor is an ardent autoist, and owns more automobiles than any other person in the United States. He is the possessor of 15 cars of every type and pattern from the luxurious touring car down to the two passenger runabout. Colonel Astor maintains three garages, one in New York, one in Paris and another in London. A strange freak of liking impels him to use foreign cars in the United States and American cars abroad. The recent automobile show in this city caused an augmentation to many big garages, for the society folks were out in numbers and gave many orders for cars to be delivered in February for spring tours. Miss Helen Gould purchased a Locomobile, F. D. Underwood bought two cars, John B. Herreshoff added three cars to his garage, William E. Corey looked over half a dozen and selected a few, and many other rich society men made purchases. Strange to say, J. Pierpont Morgan, while owning several cars, is not an enthusiast. Every year he takes a new model, but he buys an automobile for use and not for display.

Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish, to use a political term, has flopped. One year ago next month Mrs. Fish in a very heated statement declared that she was entirely opposed to suffrage for women. Indeed, she joined the forces of the "antis" and spent much time in furthering the cause of the opposition. But now she is in the fold. She has enlisted under the banner of Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont, and while she says she is not an organizer she does declare that her heart and soul are in the movement for votes for women.

I was more than a little interested in the marriage of Joseph J. Ryan, son of Thomas Fortune Ryan, to Miss Nannie Norde of Washington. While Thomas F. Ryan is one of the world's richest men and his business enterprises are almost of the same magnitude of Mr. Morgan's, his family leads a very quiet life. Mr. Ryan spends some little time abroad, but more upon his vast estate in Virginia, where he owns thousands of acres, including a mountain and a private race track. His town home in this city is one of the show places.

As for Joseph, he has been arrested for speeding his automobile in this city, and what more can I say for him?

APACHES TERRIFY PARIS BY CRIMES OF GREAT DARING

French Capital in Throes of Reign of Terror in Consequence of Vicious Criminal Element.

By Paul Villiers. (Publishers' Press Leased Wire.) Paris, Feb. 5.—Paris is suffering from a new "reign of terror." It has extended to all parts of France. Crime is rampant. It flouts the police and is demoralizing the army. Gangs of criminals, among whom are many women, infest the city, and are so bold and so disloyal in their outrages that they surpassed the Indian tribe from which they got their name, "The Apaches." They laugh at the guillotine and scoff at prison walls.

It is amazing and while criminologists are seeking an explanation of the epidemic the clerics believe they have found it.

"It is a judgment," they declare, "France has willed to be a godless nation and God has visited them with his vengeance." They point to the secularized schools, and spoliation of ecclesiastical establishments, the prosecutions of clergymen, the antagonism to the head of the church at Rome.

"What is the result?" they ask. "The young people of France are growing up with no respect for religion and without the moral restraint it imposes upon them. Sordidness of sentiment is spreading in the community. Indifference to sacred law superinduces disregard for all law. When France flew in the face of mother church she sowed the wind. Now she is reaping the whirlwind. She aimed to create a free man after her own idea. She succeeded only in fabricating a "Frankenstein." It stalks through the land and terrifies even its creators.

The clerics do not exaggerate the condition even if in the minds of many they mistake the cause. The atrocity of many of the crimes is equalled only by the demoralizing ingenuity displayed by some of the criminals.

Two constables in plain clothes were sent from the police headquarters to arrest an "Apache" who had been assuring the frequenters of a public house that he would kill a "Copper" before midnight. They met him in the street and sprang upon him, only to get with cries of agony. He was overpowered from wrists to shoulders with leather bands studded with sharp spikes and wore a spiked collar around his neck. The spikes penetrated through the thin overcoat, worn in conceal the "armor," and the hands of the constables were terribly lacerated.

Other policemen came to the attack. The "Apache" fought them with a knife having a blade 18 inches long. He stabbed two original assailants repeatedly. Then, as reinforcements came to the aid of the wounded men he dropped his knife and retreated upon an alley revolver in hand and firing two shots, wounding one policeman and perforating the uniform of another.

One of the policemen who was among the reinforcements set the desperado by the throat and fell back with his hands badly cut and torn. At the same moment another of the newcomers plunged his sabre into the breast of the "Apache" and the fight ended. Five policemen were wounded, one of them dying the next day, and the murderer's own wound was a serious one.

In another desperate fight the police were routed. Inspector Besuchet of the detective department was walking home along the Rue des Amandiers in company with a friend when he was recognized by a band of "Apaches" and attacked. The assailants numbered about a dozen, including some women. The inspector fired a shot, which brought several policemen and a soldier to the scene but after a terrific fight the police were obliged to retreat, although they car-

Centenary of Great Violinist

Musical Societies Observe the 100th Anniversary of the Birth of Ole Bull.

New York, Feb. 5.—A cable dispatch from Christiania says that the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Ole Bull, the famous violinist, was widely observed throughout Norway today. In Bergen, his birthplace, in Christiania, where he resided for many years, and in other of the chief cities special performances were given in the opera houses, while memorial exercises were held under the auspices of numerous musical and literary societies.

Through a Norwegian by birth, it was in the United States that Ole Bull achieved his greatest reputation and there are still living in New York and in other cities as well, many men and women who recollect the furors created by the later American tours of the celebrated violinist, then at the height of his fame.

His first visit to America was made in 1844. He remained here nearly two years and was heard in many of the principal cities. He returned to New York in 1852 and toured the country with a company of artists that included Adeline Patti (then only 8 years old), her sister, Amalia Patti-Strakosch, and Maurice Strakosch. One of the memorable features of this tour was the visit paid by the violinist to Henry Clay at Lexington, Ky. In 1867 he returned to Europe on account of poor health.

In 1867 he again visited the United States, going directly west and giving his first concert in Chicago. In 1870 he gave his services to the great jubilee in Boston, conducted by Patrick S. Gilmore. When he departed for Norway the following April Senator Roscoe Conkling, General Banks and other notable of the day, made farewell speeches on board the revenue cutter which conveyed the famous violinist to the steamship Russia.

In the early '70's he made several tours of America and was heard at the Centennial exposition in Philadelphia. He made several subsequent visits to this country and married his second wife here. His fatal illness overtook him on his last trip from New York to Norway, his death occurring in the city of his birth, August 17, 1880.

Beekeepers Form County Association

(Special Dispatch to The Journal.)

Ontario, Or., Feb. 5.—The beekeepers of Malheur county have organized an association with the following named officers: President, C. W. Mallett; vice president, M. Townsend; secretary treasurer, William McKibben; executive committee, the officers and J. A. Walters and Marcus Johnson.

Malheur county has several very successful apiculturists, and for the furtherance of their interests they have all felt for a long time that an association was a desirable thing.

This association will be affiliated with the National association, which has been a very great help to beekeepers throughout the country. The association will aid in encouraging the business throughout the valley, as well as giving the beekeepers a means of protection and information on many subjects pertaining to the business. It will look out and discriminate between markets for honey and aid in securing better, possibly cheaper transportation.
