The advance into Tibet was conducted along lines that showed a military development of the highest order. The troops were will disciplined, well armed and fought with gallantry and persistence.

Such a condition is altogether new in China's army and the fact, taken in connection with the knowledge that Chian is soon to adopt the German conscription system, which will give her an army of 30,000,000 shows that there is good gound for the alarm felt in England.

The recollection that England is largely responsible for the present difficulty only adds to the worry of the British officials. Lady Curzon, who had more than any one else to do with sending the expedition of Colonel Younghusband Into Tibet in 1903-04, is being severely censured at this late date.
