

THREE LINES OF WORK FOR ROADS

Science of Road Building, Road Signs and Organization in Good Roads Movement.

"We are planning three lines of work for good roads in Oregon," said L. Therkelsen, Jr., one of the influential members of the Oregon Good Roads association, today. "These are: To teach the science of road building. To erect plain road signs all over the state. To organize a branch association in every county. To this latter Judge Webster, chairman of the executive committee, will give most of his time. He will speak in all the counties, as has been announced, and he will proceed to work along the lines of a carefully laid out campaign. We expect the good roads bulletin, which is to be issued very soon, to have much influence in teaching the science of good roads. Our ambition is to induce all counties to adopt a uniform system of road building. To build, say, a boulevard from Portland to the California line, is rather impossible at the present time, but we can induce counties to cooperate with each other in building uniformly and continuously the roads which constitute arteries of trade over the state. I thoroughly agree with others who have said that if we build good roads—that is, roads that may be used the year around conveniently—and build straight through, that development will attend the building and development will be in proportion to the quality of our road building. I am of the opinion," continued Mr. Therkelsen, "that the automobile associations of the state can be of great help to the Good Roads association in putting up signs at intersections. It would be of great help to the automobilists, but no more to the automobilists than to any one else who travels. There is nothing more important to Oregon than good roads. There is nothing more worth the while of good citizens than to cooperate in good roads building."

Exhume Body Second Time.

(United Press Leased Wire.) Paris, Mo., March 21.—It was learned here today that the body of Professor J. T. Vaughn was exhumed for the second time in Monroe City. The body was disinterred yesterday on the request of relatives of Vaughn's widow, who, with Dr. Hull, is charged jointly with having poisoned Vaughn. It is reported that a portion of the spinal column and the tongue of the dead man were removed. The parts were taken to St. Louis by Dr. George Still of Kirksville, who is reported to have performed the operation. It is said Mrs. Vaughn's attorney expects to find a cancer at the root of Vaughn's tongue. It is alleged that he stated that a man with such a disease would be better off dead. This, it is said, will be offered as evidence in support of the theory that Vaughn committed suicide.

"STUBBORN CINDERELLA" AMUSING; "THE ALASKAN" AT THE BAKER

Musical Comedy at Bungalow Animated and Fluffy Play of Three Acts.

By E. L. Homer B. Mason and "A Stubborn Cinderella," filled the Bungalow last night with a big and admiring audience. This musical comedy is not very different from the usual Hough, Adams and Howard offering, for it is true that they are all very much alike. It is also true that they usually possess a fund of catchy, frothy music and witty dialogues and are always entertaining. This particular edition is an animated and fluffy conceit of three acts (incidentally, two acts is about the proper length for musical comedy), that without beating over any new paths unfolds a pretty love story, breathing the atmosphere of the college cutup and involving many amusing absurdities. Lady Leslie, the daughter of an earl, has been brought up in the convent in utter ignorance of the world, and its people, and is an interesting example of unsophisticated youth. She is engaged to the Grand Duke Boris of Russia, and with an aunt and an array of body guards is traveling through America, when she meets "Mac," a lively college youth, and loves him at first sight. Pretending to be a great sculptor, "Mac" is invited to travel with the party, in order that he may model an image of Lady Leslie. Complications innumerable come of it all, with a final sweeping away of obstacles. Lady Leslie and "Mac" take the final curtain in each other's arms, pledging their love in perfectly sophisticated fashion.

Homer B. Mason, as "Mac," is a wholesome player, easy and sure, never obtrusive, and ever in the picture. With chic and clever comedy, he unconsciously dominates every situation and makes an immediate hit. Mr. Mason is by long odds the flower of the production. Miss Carolyn Lilla is the Lady Leslie and has the advantage of a delicate, pretty and true voice. Her acting is unforced and sincere. A well rounded and telling characterization was that of George E. Romain as Colonel Hunt, the spluttering guardian of Cinderella. A sprightly girl with nimble toes and saucy ways is Miss Beattie Merrill, who played Lots with an abandon and vivacity that gained instantaneous favor. Frank Carter as "Skeeter," a college rony, is a clever dancer. One of the funny hits, splendidly executed, was furnished by Charles Wilson as an engineer, with an avalanche of pessimism. The chorus is not especially notable for pulchritude or accomplishments and walks perfectly through unattractive chorus effects. They are a shabby looking and poorly trained lot. Mr. Singer of the Princess Amusement company has not been generous in mounting or costuming.

ENLIST LAYMEN IN CHURCH, WORK

Bishop Scadding Tells of Aims of Laymen's Missionary Movement.

"The Church and the Laymen's Missionary Movement," was the subject of the sermon delivered by Right Rev. Charles Scadding, Bishop of Oregon, at St. David's church yesterday. He said in part: "The Laymen's Missionary Movement comes to Portland next week, and unless men are fully instructed in, and clearly grasp, its intention, scope and spirit, they will misunderstand its workings and miss its uplifting force. The movement, begun in the United States in January of 1907, is a spontaneous, not an administrative, movement. Its sole aim is to act as an awakening impulse to a more generous support of missionary endeavor by every layman, and to enlist his active cooperation in this work in his own parish. The movement, however, has not been confined to the United States and Canada. By invitation of various British missionary societies, a deputation of six laymen, two of whom were churchmen, was sent to London last May. The archbishop of Canterbury, at Lambeth palace, and Bishop Montgomery, the secretary of the gospel, also received the deputation, and in their respective chapels commended them and the movement to the blessing of God. Keen Interest of Churches. "The attitude of the Episcopal church toward the movement is, for the most part, that of keen interest and sympathy and cooperation, even if in details we cannot follow out fully the ideas of the originator. Because of her truly catholic heritage and position, she realizes her catholic duty and privilege to carry the gospel into all the world. Some of our greatest bishops, like Bishop Hall of Vermont, Anderson of Chicago, Nichols of California and our Presiding Bishop, Tuttle, are foremost in their leadership in having the church stand shoulder to shoulder with other Christian friends whose energy, zeal and liberality for missions have received evidence tokens of the divine approval and blessing. "We who hold the catholic faith in its well-rounded proportions, and try to live in the unity of spirit and bond of peace, who know the power of a divinely appointed ministry, and the sacramental life, have so much to share with others that of all men we should be most missionary, as well as the most patient and the most loving. No New Machinery. "The strong feature of the Laymen's Missionary movement is that it introduces no new machinery, does not send out missionaries or administer missionary funds, but seeks to cooperate with the regularly established agencies of the church in the extension of their work. It is not a vain attempt to bring about church unity upon a cheap and chimerical plan of exchanging courtesies by exchange of pulpits. The movement is by laymen, to laymen, for laymen. It is a mainly simple, direct movement of man to man. The idea is to create or arouse in laymen in Christian men a sense of responsibility for the missionary work of the church of which he claims to be a member. "The Episcopal Laymen's Church Extension conference will be held in St. David's church on Thursday, March 31, at 8 p. m. The best work will be done in the sectional conferences, when the laymen in each parish rouse themselves to do more for their parish, for the diocese and for the church at large. The mass meetings will furnish information about the foreign field, and stir up zeal for the cause."

Woodland Fruit Growers Meet. (Special Dispatch to The Journal.) Woodland, Wash., March 21.—The Lewis River Valley Fruit Growers' association held a large and enthusiastic meeting Saturday. C. W. Chapman of Portland and R. N. Miller of Ephraim, fruit inspector for this district, spoke on cooperation in planting but a few varieties of apples and in spraying to kill fruit pests. Plans were made in business session to begin cooperative buying. "Hot Cross Buns." Warning: Don't wait till the last minute to order your Hot Cross Buns. Order now or you may find your grocer out. ### METHODISTS LEAD IN REGISTRATION CONTEST

A spirit of friendly rivalry has developed among local churches for registrations of attendance at the laymen's missionary movement convention, which is to be held in Portland, March 29, 30 and 31. At the present time the Methodists lead, with 47 registrations. The Baptists come next with 40 registrations, and the Episcopalians third, with 21 registrations. Other denominations are in the following order: Congregational, 12; Presbyterian, 10; Friends, 8; United Presbyterian, 5; Evangelical, 2. Dr. C. L. Rhoades spoke to the Baptists concerning the scope and purposes of the laymen's missionary movement at the White Temple yesterday morning, afternoon and evening. C. V. Vickrey will come to Portland Wednesday to hold a series of similar meetings with the Methodists of Portland. Members of the denomination will entertain Mr. Vickrey at luncheon Wednesday. T. M. Stead will reach Portland Thursday and will speak to the Presbyterians. The purpose is to explain to all denominations what the laymen's missionary movement is expected to do in the way of awakening enthusiasm for foreign missions among all denominations. Leaders of the movement will probably arrive in the city the latter part of this week, and will speak from the pulpits of Portland churches next Sunday.

ANNAPOLIS MIDDIES ARE UNDER ARREST

Annapolis, Md., March 21.—Every midshipman at the Naval Academy is practically under arrest. Captain G. M. Bowyer has issued an order confining the entire body of midshipmen to the precincts of the academy for an indefinite period. The offense which drew on the middies this punishment was disrespect to the officer in charge of the super-dormitory last evening by giving him what is known as the "silence." Lieutenant Berthold, the officer in question, had incurred their dislike and at the supper tables the usual animated chatter and bustle of the evening meal was carefully suppressed. Captain Bowyer in his order designated this concerted "silence" as insubordination.

Sale Starts TUESDAY NOON 12 O'CLOCK SHARP

Tuesday—tomorrow—at noon, 12 o'clock sharp, a new department will be thrown open to the public. In celebration of the event we will place on sale 300 Trimmed Hats and no two alike, all at the one price, $2.98, which is less than half of what any milliner in town would ask you. WE ARE NEW IN THE MILLINERY BUSINESS. WE ARE GOING TO SELL HATS THE WAY WE SELL CALICO AND MUSLIN. LOTS OF IT AT A LOW MARGIN OF PROFIT. NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR STYLE OR EXCLUSIVENESS. There seems to be a general opinion that when you buy millinery you must pay the retailer profits that are beyond all reason. This has been brought about because of the many so-called exclusive millinery shops who mark millinery at the highest possible price it will bring. NOT HOW MUCH CAN WE ASK, BUT HOW LITTLE CAN WE SELL IT FOR WILL BE OUR SYSTEM. Of course you expect to get one or more new hats before Easter, and possibly have allowed yourself $10 to purchase it, but regardless of the amount you have intended to pay you owe it to yourself to see these beauties tomorrow. There are large, small and medium shapes in rough, flat braids, loose basket weaves and beautiful nets in black, burnt and tuscany. Shapely turbans and handsome black and white Milan hats and many other fashionable styles. Exquisite trimming effects in imported flowers, novelty scarf drapings, wings, ornaments, velvets and ribbons. Competition never has and never will meet this great offering. We are very busy this evening opening up and placing our stock. It will be impossible for us to be in readiness before noon tomorrow. One entire half of our store will be devoted exclusively to the display of hats. Hats at all prices, but not one will be sold before tomorrow noon at the sale price.
