

CAMERON CAMPS ON WILDE'S TRAIL

Home Telephone Bond Transactions to Be Investigated by the Grand Jury.

Louis J. Wilde, promoter and banker, formerly of Portland, and now ranked among the leading citizens of San Diego, Cal., may be given a taste of District Attorney Cameron's grand jury medicine. The medicine is labeled "Oregon Trust," and is of the same brand administered to Walter H. Moore, W. Cooper Morris and other defendants in the Oregon Trust roundup.

District Attorney Cameron is authorized by the statement that the grand jury may soon be called to look into the transactions whereby big blocks of Home Telephone bonds were sold to the Oregon Trust, and later upon the depositors in that lamented institution.

If it were not for the fact that Wilde is a non-resident of Oregon and has been for some time, the statute of limitations would have run against any criminal act in which he might have been concerned. His removal to San Diego after the sale of the Oregon Trust to the German-American bank makes it possible to prosecute him, despite the lapse of time.

Through the trial of Walter H. Moore last month, there is a strain of desire to hit Wilde. Deputy District Attorney Fitzgerald referred to him as one of the "choicest spirits of this aggregation," and C. W. Fulton, defending Moore, said he had a desire to see Wilde in the state of Oregon, and that he would be glad to let drop several strong hints that Wilde was the man the district attorney should "get."

With the closing of the case against Moore, this morning and the near approach of the trial of Morris, the district attorney is beginning to prow around on the Wilde trail. It is known that many interesting things regarding Wilde's connection with the bank were developed during the investigation made by the district attorney's office, and Cameron strongly intimated this morning that enough facts have been brought out to warrant taking the case to the grand jury.

With the indictments against W. H. Moore and E. E. Zerk dismissed, only the cases against Morris, H. A. Moore and Leo Friede remain. It is regarded as unlikely that H. A. Moore will ever be tried, but Friede is on the anxious seat. The district attorney claims to hold damaging evidence to show that Friede actually knew the condition of the bank while it was tottering, although as to many of the deals made by Morris and Moore he was ignorant.

WOMAN'S DREAM

(Continued from Page One.) weeks ago," she said, "and told him I was thinking of leaving there. He has been writing me ever since he was here last summer to come to Portland and open a shop, saying there was a good opening there, and I had about decided to go. We met here last summer through a friend who knew Wezler. He took me to the parks several times, and we grew to be good friends. I did not know, however, that he was a married man or I would not have written to him. In fact, I only wrote him two or three letters and some postal cards, sometimes he sent me as many as three cards a day."

Charles E. Wezler, alias Charles J. Wezler, alias Edward Wezler, salesman, who is accused of the murder of his mother-in-law, Mrs. Fredericka Schultz, of Tacoma, composed the decoy letter, by means of which he lured the murdered woman to the scene of the crime, in Portland, more than three weeks ago.

Then, for several days after its composition, he endeavored to induce chance acquaintances in Portland to copy the letter for him, but everywhere met with refusal. Desperate he tried Sunday evening, before he left Portland for Tacoma, to persuade 18-year-old A. E. Bourdeau, the Duluth, Minn., boy to copy the decoy missive.

Will Get Copy. With this startling clue upon which to work, the police will send up Tacoma for a photographic copy of the decoy letter received by Mrs. Schultz and then the hunt for the Portland accomplice, who, they think, made the copy, will begin. Samples of the handwriting of one of Wezler's Portland friends have already been obtained.

So numerous were the developments yesterday and today in the chase for the accused murderer that the police were confused. First, it was found he was well known by R. C. Knight, proprietor of Knight's cigar store at 325 Washington street, and was frequently seen in the store.

Following up this clue, the police found, through Mr. Knight, much valuable information about the habits and disposition of Wezler. He began frequenting the cigar store, and the corner at Sixth and Washington streets, several weeks ago.

Carried Suit Case. Wezler was first noted by Mr. Knight more than a month ago when he asked if he would be permitted to deposit his suit case, which contained advertising calendars, which he was selling, at the store for several hours.

After that time, he frequently left his suit case and sample case at the store, and stopped there frequently. Often times he would not be seen for two or three days at a time, and several times he left his suitcase for a period of that length. "He seemed to have no friends," said Mr. Knight today, "but was known slightly by several of the boys. He could talk about nothing else but his troubles."

"My wife," he told me one day about three weeks ago, "got a divorce and I gave her everything I had—my children and my money and my property—and now she wants me to pay alimony. I think I saw a detective from Tacoma here yesterday and I fear he was looking for me and wanted to take me back with him. I'll be d— if I'll give her any money."

Say He Is Crazy. "He did not seem to think much of his wife, but talked of her a great deal. Several of the boys who knew him said he was crazy, but I think he was well balanced."

"He wrote the decoy letter received by Mrs. Schultz in Portland about three weeks ago. He did not show it to me, but tried to induce a friend of mine, whose name I do not care to give, to copy it for him. He said his mother-in-law would recognize his hand writing. But my friend refused to help him."

"I heard at that time that he tried to get several others to copy the letter, but as far as I learned he failed. By that time I knew of the contents of the missive, but we understood he wanted to use it so he could see his children. He said he once studied medicine, and could pass as 'Dr. Powers.'"

Woman's Story. Mr. Knight said he heard him tell several persons in the cigar store of his marital trials. He said, however, he never heard Wezler utter a threat against his divorced wife or any member of her family.

"Sunday afternoon and night a week ago, Wezler was in the store several times," continued Mr. Knight. "He said he had written several times to his wife, but she would not answer him. He told me he had to have a drink, but I told him the saloons were closed on Sunday and so far as I knew, could not get it."

"He was with some man I never saw before, and they visited the store several times during the course of the afternoon. Wezler continued to talk about his wife of the night before."

"It must have been about 10 o'clock Sunday night that I last saw him. He stayed in the store for some time, and then rushed off, saying he was going to the union passenger station to mail a letter. I have not seen him since."

Mr. Knight said Wezler seemed always well supplied with money. He declared that Wezler drank but seldom to excess. He said he seemed to work hard, but his mind was always burdened with his supposed troubles, and that he invariably switched the conversation from other topics to a discussion of his trials.

H. Prosser, clerk in the cigar store, took up the thread of the story. He said Wezler went into the cigar store Tuesday morning, a week ago yesterday. He was nervous and his hands were shaking as though from palsy, he said.

In Nervous Condition. "I asked him why he was so nervous," Mr. Prosser said today. "He held out his trembling right hand."

Mr. Prosser said Wezler commented on his nervousness and said he did not know the reason for it, "except that it might be booze."

On Tuesday Wezler left two theatre programs, which he had promised a friend of Knight's at the cigar store. The programs were still there today.

They are from Pantages theatres in St. Joseph, Mo., and Babson City, Mo. He said he had witnessed performances in those theatres many times.

Another man, a timber cruiser who worked for the government during the Oregon land fraud cases, said today he saw Wezler, who he met in the post-office corridor, either Tuesday or Wednesday, he did not remember which. He said he simply spoke to him.

Freestone Murder Case to Jury. (Special Press Landed Wire.) Everett, Wash., April 13.—The Freestone murder case will go to the jury today and a verdict is expected by tonight. The trial has been in progress 10 days. William Freestone is an old resident. He is accused of having shot and killed Mrs. Edna Warr, a woman by whom he declares he was killed. The defense rests its case on a plea of accidental shooting. Freestone testified that he pulled the gun when pounced upon by a brother of the dead woman and that during the scuffle the revolver was accidentally discharged.

Enumerators Instructed. (Special Dispatch to The Journal.) Albany, Or., April 13.—R. J. Hendricks, United States census director for the first district of Oregon, met with the Lincoln county enumerators yesterday at the Commercial club rooms and gave them instructions for their work.
