Remarkable Impersonation of Joan of Arc

Elizabeth Gulce as Joan of Arc, with Omar Kahayyam, the handsomest horse in the world.

When Maud Adams, who is admitted to be perhaps the most talented actress appeared before the faculty of Harvard university one year ago in her celebrated impersonation of Joan of Arc, Mr. Frohman spread a picture broadcast on the great little actress, clad in armor, standing at the head of a milk-white steed. This picture caught the fancy of many as being not only unique, but possessing particular human interest. But to people associated more closely with animal life and the strenuous activities of the sawdust ring, this picture, although so famous, did not appeal. By most professionals it has always been argued that to the circus has ever belonged the pastmasterhood of the art of posing. The trained horse of the ring poses naturally: it is second nature with him. In the same way the woman, who has chosen the glamour of the big tents, by reason of the athletic life led by her and the insistent demands for physical grace of movement, has no peer and cannot be excelled by any actress, no matter how intellectual and versatile. The picture, printed herewith, presents Miss Elizabeth Gulce, of the Sells-Floto show, posed as Joan of Arc, her companion being Omar Kahayyam, the handsomest and best trained horse in the world. A comparison of both pictures demonstrates the truth of the argument regarding the possibilities of the circus as expressed above. Miss Gulce will appear twice daily with the big Sells-Floto show when it opens in Portland May 23 for four performances.

Ontario, Or., May 16.-The Ontario high school won the third annual intercollegiate track and field meet held at the fair grounds in this city Saturday afternoon, winning the silver cup by 20 points. Will Flier of Ontario and Grey McConnell of Boise were the stars of the meet. Up to last week one shearing plant near Echo had sheared 60,000 head of sheep.
