INSURGENTS CLAIM ROOSEVELT; PLAN TO WIN WITH HIM

special session of congress to revise the tariff. Roosevelt was moving out and the executive offices were in confusion. The former president led the committee into the old cabinet room, where Nelson, as chairman of the executive committee, outlined the plan of attack that had been made, defined its object, estimated the chances of success of the insurgent program and asked Roosevelt to endorse the plans officially.

himself, and the insurgents that throughout his administration Speaker Cannon and certain followers had opposed measure after measure that he had advanced and advocated. He said in the beginning that he personally favored the insurgent cause and was in sympathy with their aims. He said, however, that he was now preparing to get out of the limelight, that another man was to take the reins and that a new president might not like to have them taken from his hands.

Would Not Embarrass Taft. Roosevelt said it seemed he would be encroaching upon the prerogatives of his successor if he publicly endorsed the insurgents. He said he had been dealing with these things in his own way and his successor would want to do the same without any interference.

Through the interview the only objection Roosevelt made to a public declaration of sympathy with the insurgents was the fact that his successor might be embarrassed. For an hour and a half Roosevelt talked over questions connected with the insurgent movement. The committee outlined various projects. Repeatedly Roosevelt evinced a desire to aid the cause, seeking only a way that would not leave him open to a charge of having interfered with Taft.

Finally he offered to write a letter to Representative Nelson, endorsing the insurgent program.

Entrusted by G. O. P. Machine. He told reluctantly of having written a similar letter for the use of the "organization" Republicans, early in his administration. In return, he said, they had promised to put through his legislative program.

"And see what they have done for me," he interjected, leaning forward and grasping the arms of his chair. "Under the circumstances, he said, he would not write a letter for publication, but it could be used freely and without reserve among the members of the house. It might be shown to any one, he said, even to Uncle Joe himself. The letter, as he outlined it, was to be a complete endorsement of the insurgent program for amending the rules and reducing the power of the speaker.

When the insurgents left it was understood Roosevelt was to write the letter and send it to Representative Nelson.

Taft Treats It as a Joke. At noon the next day Roosevelt sat in the president's room of the senate chamber at the capitol, signing final bills of the administration. All the ceremonial preparatory to the inauguration of President Taft were under way. About Roosevelt were grouped members of the house and senate. Taft also was in the room.

Roosevelt sent for Gardner and Nelson. He grasped Nelson's hand and exclaimed: "Well, I'm sorry."

Without discussing directly the suggestion as it had been made by the insurgents, he said he had brought to Taft's attention the suggestion that the rules be revised and Cannon's power abolished. As a result of the discussion that followed, he said, he concluded that it would be impossible to write the letter he had offered Nelson. He expressed great sympathy with the insurgent plans.

"Well, Mr. President," said Gardner, "will you ask Mr. Taft to do what he can for us?"

With an impulsive gesture Roosevelt grasped Gardner and Nelson by the hand and led them to where Taft stood. The other occupants of the room attracted their attention was turned to the two congressmen and Roosevelt. Roosevelt briefly explained to Taft the plans the insurgents had made to fight the rules and Cannon, and for five minutes pleaded for support for the insurgent cause, ending: "At least, keep your hands off."

Taft listened to the fervid plea, threw up his hands and turned the matter off in a joking way.

Roosevelt Blunt Since That Day. That was the last official stand Roosevelt took in favor of the insurgent cause, the report concludes.

Within half an hour more Roosevelt had turned the presidency over to Taft. Since that morning in the president's room in the capitol Roosevelt has not publicly discussed politics.

The insurgents, however, it was learned authoritatively today, have kept in close touch with the former president. Letter after letter has been sent to Africa by insurgent leaders here. Many of them, it is learned, have been answered, but the answers have been carefully guarded. These letters, it is said, account in part for the intimate knowledge of the political situation Roosevelt was found to have when he dodged the pitfalls set for him by correspondents who first met him when he began his return journey to America.

The United States senate as at present composed is made up of 49 Republicans and 35 Democrats. The Democratic leaders are hopeful of adding to their representation next fall by the election of Democratic senators in Nebraska, Montana, Missouri, Delaware, New Jersey, Nevada, Wisconsin, Ohio, Indiana and New York. This would make the United States senate 50 Republicans and 42 Democrats.

ATTORNEYS MOVE TO QUASH CASE AGAINST LORIMER

District Attorney Declares He Is Ready to Reindict Browne, the Democratic House Leader.

(United Press Leased Wire.) Chicago, May 24.—The trial of Lee O'Neill Browne, Democratic house leader of the Illinois legislature, charged with bribery in connection with the election of William Lorimer to the United States senate, was begun here today. Attorneys for the defense moved to quash the indictment and a long argument was begun.

The motion to quash was based on technical grounds.

District Attorney Wayman, who conducted the investigation that led to Browne's indictment, declared that he

A Scottish Proposal. Success.

Sandy and his lass had been sitting together about half an hour in silence. "Maggie," he said, at length, "wanna I here on the Sawbath night?" "Aye, Sandy, I daur say you were." "An' wanna I here on Monday night?" "Aye, so ye were."
