

CEMETERY WOULD MAKE BEAUTIFUL PARK, SAYS ARTIST

Howard Everts Tweed, of Chicago, Agrees With Residents That Lone Fir Could Be Greatly Improved.

Transformation of the Lone Fir cemetery into a modern park and beauty spot is the tentative plan of a number of prominent residents who have become interested with other motives than to assist in beautifying the city.

Joseph A. Strowbridge Jr. is at the head of the movement. He has already interested a large number of cemetery lot owners. As yet the matter is in embryonic state, but a meeting of those interested is planned as soon as the preliminary details are outlined more fully.

Of particular interest in connection with the movement is the presence in the city at this time of Howard Everts Tweed, landscape architect of Chicago and a lecturer of note on civic improvements. Mr. Tweed, in looking over the city, visited the Lone Fir cemetery. Upon a very careful and thorough investigation he declared it could be transformed into one of the prettiest parks in the country and be made a veritable beauty spot with lawns, walks and shrubbery artistically arranged and pleasing to the eye.

Can Be Made Beautiful.
"The old cemetery with monuments, fences, footstones and copings is rapidly disappearing in the modern cities," said Mr. Tweed in speaking of this much-neglected subject. "Instead of finding the modern burial place a large park, with walks and velvety lawns, no tombstones to obstruct the view and no dilapidated fences to offend the eye. Headstones are placed flat on the ground and a little below the level of the sod so that the lawn mower may run over it without difficulty in trimming the lawn."

"Such a cemetery is easily cared for and makes a place of great beauty compared with the old style graveyard with its innumerable unsightly stones. Lone Fir cemetery can be transformed into a beautiful park."

Mr. Tweed came here a few days ago to see the country and has already fallen so deeply in love with the climate that he believes it will eventually land him here for good.

"I have visited most places in the United States," Mr. Tweed explained, "and have found no place with a more suitable climate, in my opinion, than Portland. It is the climate that appeals to the lover of nature, for it is, indeed, favorable to all vegetation. I believe anything in plant life will grow here, and luxuriantly. The climate of England is often spoken of as being about right for plants from the tropics as well as from the northern regions, but from my observations so far, I believe Portland's climate is far better adapted than that of England."

"And I am exceptionally well pleased with Portland in many other ways, as, for instance, its moral tone."

Needs Better Care.
"Its greatest need today, perhaps, is better street car facilities, especially on the east side of the river. The problem would be solved by a tunnel under the river."

"The children's playgrounds, I hope, are only starters. These playgrounds should be put up as neighborhood centers, as in the large cities in the east, with free reading rooms, free baths and other conveniences. The city has made a good start, but it must not rest with the start."

VOLUNTEERS OF AMERICA STAND BY MISS STARKS

"At a special meeting called by members of the V. of A. to discuss charges made by Mrs. Electra Winders in her cross charges against her husband's divorce suit it was unanimously decided to stand by Miss Starks and protect her against the unwarranted attack, as we believe she is innocent of any wrong doing. We believe in her integrity and honesty of purpose and Christian character."

E. C. MOTT, Secretary.
"In answer to the article in the Sunday issue of your paper bearing on the Winders divorce suit, I notice my name has been freely used in connection with this case."

"I wish to state that I am perfectly innocent and the victim of unprincipled people. I notice in the cross suit by Electra Winders that I am accused of trying to win her husband's affection, which is absolutely false. I have never at any time that I remember been in Mr. Winders' company without the presence of the two women assisting me in the mission work."

"I understand long before I came here that there was considerable friction in the Winders family and it has culminated in divorce proceedings and unfortunately I have been made the victim of a jealous woman."

"The following letter will explain the nature of my trip to Grants Pass."

To Whom It May Concern:—Miss Starks went to Grants Pass with me, and I went on business. I have property there and it was necessary for me to have a witness with me and so I persuaded her to go with me and so far as Mr. Winders having anything to do with us or our business, it is not true.

MRS. M. E. WRIGHT.

LARGE AUDIENCE APPRECIATES ACTING OF MARGARET ANGLIN

"The Awakening of Helena Richie" Play of Emotional Depression.

By E. I.

A big audience assembled last night at the Bungalow to see Margaret Anglin in Charlotte Thompson's dramatization of Margaret Deland's novel, "The Awakening of Helena Richie." The play has to do with one of those threadbare principles that is a waste of time. It is a play of emotional depression, only made witnessable by the splendid maneuvers of Miss Anglin.

Helena is a woman with a "heart." She has been married to one man, and to save herself from being beaten to death by him she runs away with a lover. The play opens, while Helena is hiding in Old Chester, Pa., where she receives frequent visits from her lover, whom she passes on the neighboring folk as her brother, meantime holding her ear to the ground in anticipation of her husband's death.

Through the offices of Dr. Lavender, she adopts a child. The neighborhood learns her wretched story, her lover refuses to marry her when she is eventually free from her marital bonds, and Dr. Lavender takes the child from her. Then it is that Helena rises from the mire a strangely exalted and repentant thing apart. After this bit of expiation, the child is returned to her, and Helena puts away her cup of chocolate, her box of sweets, her bottle of heliograph and other insignia of the life of the courtesan, and becomes a sweet, patient and calmly resigned being of the respectable sisterhood.

There was no vehement weeping, sobbing and wailing from Miss Anglin as she waded through the frantic episodes of the Deland novel. She gave a tender, repressive and always compelling reading of the lines. Her daring employment of the commonplace in scenes of great stress and the audacity with which she will press the significance of a dozen lines into one swift departing cry are illuminating marks of the Anglin method of emotional acting.

Perhaps the most effective illustration of the natural method of Miss Anglin was exhibited in her confessional scene with Dr. Lavender, when the old clergyman tells her that it is not to the point that she loves little David so much that she cannot bear to give him up, but does she love him so much that she can give him up? Can she who has lived a life teach the child to tell the truth? Can she make him brave, who has himself refused to endure? Can she make him honorable, who has deceived them all?

Where Caliber Tested.
It is in this scene that the caliber of the actress is tested, and the dignity, tenderness and beautiful comprehension with which she crowned her work, without resorting to the pyrotechnics of drenching emotion, was a telling conception.

The surrounding roles are interesting. Little David as played by Master Raymond Hackett was excellent. Though Remembering seven superior acts squandered on the one bill last week, patrons of the vaudeville went to the Orpheum yesterday with palates fixed for another overdose of unrefined pleasure. To say they were disappointed would be putting it mildly.

Let mercy temper your judgment, for the bill is not wholly bad. It might even be worse, although not much worse. But let that be as it may, we must not forget past pleasures we have enjoyed in the show house.

This week's bill is not one that can be highly recommended, yet it has saving qualities. Stepp, Mehlinger and King, in a musical mummery, do much to sweeten the lemon and set apart from other players who abuse their privileges would shine.

Jack London ladies the expected in "A Wicked Woman," approaching upon the border line of smuttness for the benefit of indifference. With effort born of desperation, Franklin Underwood and Frances Sloan, whom, fortunately for them, Portland knows are possessed of ability, fought for the trickling applause with which they were rewarded.

Lon Anger succeeded in measure in doing so. Gus Solik's Bama girls in "Toyshop Pastimes" kitted neatly and waited out to the audience several dabs of entertainment.

There were three other acts, with moving pictures that also ran and the Orpheum orchestra. And if this isn't tempering with mercy, what is?

"Idolized Ida" Pleases.

By V. H. P.
Theatregoers who yesterday saw the opening performances of the week at the Lyric, where the Armstrong Musical Comedy company is idolizing "Idolized Ida," and incidentally adding to the merriment with songs and dances, were pleased. Perhaps they were pleased because there was plentiful opportunity to laugh.

"Idolized Ida," like all the Armstrong attractions, is mingled burlesque and vaudeville, with a stage setting of pretty girls and a basis of frivolity. Where usually lack of coherency in a plot is regarded as a fault, that looseness in "Idolized Ida"—in the plot, you know—makes it all the more attractive. As a matter of fact the burlesque vaudeville attraction has no more of a plot than is necessary to give it a name. Ethel Davis and Will Howard scored in "You and I," Clara Howard and chorus in "Whistle When You Walk Out," were endorsed and Will Armstrong in "O'Reilly," was applauded. Other specialties were enjoyed.

Tonight the Armstrong Musical Comedy company and vaudeville players from all the theatres of the city will participate in the benefit performance given for Marjory Mahr, injured chorus girl, at the Lyric.

TO OPERATE STEAMER ON UPPER WILLAMETTE

(Special Dispatch to The Journal.)
Eugene, Or., July 26.—With a view to ascertaining the condition of the upper river at this season of the year, Captain A. B. Graham and Captain C. Fahs, of the Oregon City Transportation company, arrived here from Portland yesterday afternoon and left immediately in a skiff down the river. They say they intend to operate a steamer on the upper river as far as Eugene when the water is at a proper stage if the condition of the stream warrants.

In the "Oregon," now operating between Portland and Oregon City, these men claim to have the lightest draft boat in the country and say that they will operate it on the upper river if their investigation proves that the condition of the river will permit of it.

WOULD INCREASE CITY'S TERRITORY

Two petitioners yesterday appeared before the judges to commit to ask for the annexation of part of precinct No. 109, which is between Willamette Heights and Linnton. The idea is to get a section of the country into the city for speculative purposes on the part of real estate dealers.

In taking in this territory, the city rock pile, Claremont, Cliff Inn and Lake View taverns would be inside the city limits. Councilman Cellars, chairman of the committee is opposed to taking in the land, while Councilman Ellis favors it. The question of recommending it will be decided by Councilman Baker, the third committeeman, who was absent yesterday.

MAKE BIG FIND IN OPIUM STILL RAID

(United Press Landed Wire.)
Kansas City, July 26.—Federal officers today raided a big opium still, said to be the largest yet uncovered by the government. The government agents captured several men and confiscated a large quantity of opium and $25,000 in cash. The raid followed a similar one made in St. Louis recently. The opium is believed to have been smuggled from Mexico.

DR. CRIPPEN NOT UNDER ARREST

London Police Doubt Story of Capture Printed in London Newspaper.

(United Press Landed Wire.)
London, July 26.—Scotland Yard today denies that any official messages have been received here of the arrest of a man supposed to be Dr. Hawley Crippen, and a woman masquerading in boy's clothing and supposed to be Miss. Ethel Claire Leneve, on the steamer Montrose, bound for Montreal. The officials say they are out of touch with the steamer Montrose and doubt the truth of a story that Crippen and the young woman have been arrested by the captain of the liner.

A London paper prints a story that Crippen was arrested and adds that Miss Leneve confessed her identity, but denied all knowledge of the murder of Belle Elmore (Mrs. Hawley Crippen). This newspaper says, "Dr. Crippen" and "Miss Leneve" were overheard discussing the alleged crime.

The newspaper's account of the arrest came by wireless from the vessel, it is stated.

Scotland Yard officials fear that the captain of the Montrose may be mistaken in his identification of the couple aboard the vessel.

Taxing mortgages is one of the impracticable things, or if not, it hits the wrong people and does more harm than good.
